MIDLAND COUNTIES COAL COMPANY,
By EDWARD J. DOYLE, Secretary.

MARSHALL PLEADS FOR LABOR HARMONY

Addressing International Conference, He Asks Work in Amity and Human Sympathy.

OBJECTS TO TALK OF CLASS

Labor Group Suggests a 48-Hour Week Maximum, but Recommends 44 Hours.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Vice President Marshall visited the International Labor Conference late today, making a short address and shaking hands with the delegates. The visit came as a surprise at a moment when the labor delegates were putting forward amendments to the convention on hours of work.

Announcing that he spoke for nobody but himself, the Vice President told the delegates that he occupied "a unique position among officials on the face of the globe," for the reason that "I am without power or authority or influence."

Mr. Marshall stated that he did not know enough about the problems before the conference to discuss them intelligently.

"I have troubles enough of my own," he said, adding amid laughter and applause, "I preside over the Senate of the United States."

"But I do have some idea as to how the many wrongs which exist in the relations of labor and capital are to be solved," he said, "and I cannot help saying this to you: For God's sake, get at the solution of these problems in a spirit of amity and concord and friendship and common human sympathy."

The Vice President objected to referring to legislation in the interest of the "laboring class" or any other class, saying: "I object to classes in a world where God made men." He proceeded to classify legislation into two groups, the first being that which lacks the support of the people and therefore creates trouble and turmoil, and the second or successful sort "which seeks to crystallize into the law of the land the public opinion of the country." His closing statement was a wish that a "golden mean" might be reached in the conference after "radicals and conservatives" had expressed their views.

In offering a motion to thank Vice President Marshall for his address, George O. Barnes, member of the British War Ministry and Government delegate, said he regretted the absence of President Wilson, who, he said, had made "such magnificent efforts on behalf of the democracies of the world."

The conference before adjourning until Monday accepted an invitation from Secretary Daniels to make a trip tomorrow on the Mayflower to Mount Vernon.

S. R. Parsons of Canada, an employers' delegate, announced today that he dissented from the majority report of the employer representatives on the draft convention regarding a forty-eight-hour week, giving as his reason that "until the United States has spoken Canada must keep silent."

"The world is not suffering on account of long hours," he said. "It is suffering on account of lack of food and clothing. There are a hundred million people in the Old World on the verge of starvation. Not one-third of the industries of the world are producing to full capacity. Since the introduction of the eight-hour day in France there has been a 20 per cent. reduction in production."

The labor group today introduced its amendments to the proposed draft convention submitted by the Organizing Committee. The changes were read and explained by Leon Juhaux of France and T. Shaw of Great Britain.

The two principal changes suggested were that the legislation should refer to "commercial undertakings" as well as to industrial establishments, and that the eight-hour day and forty-eight hour week should be laid down as maxima instead of a simple declaration for the forty-eight-hour week. Saturday half-holidays and a forty-four-hour week were "recommended."

It was proposed also that the term "industrial establishments" should be defined to include "the transport of passengers or goods by sea, by road, by canal, or by rail, including the handling of goods at docks, quays, wharves, and warehouses."

German delegates, the message added, have obtained steamer accommodations and will sail about Nov. 15.

STEEL IN FEWER HANDS.

Drop of 615 in Common Shareholders at the End of Third Quarter.

Holders of the common shares of the United States Steel Corporation at the end of the third quarter numbered 73,456, a decline of 615 from the figures at the end of the second quarter. The first quarter of the year showed the number of holders to be 78,018.

While the number of stockholders has declined, the liquidation of small holdings has not returned stock to brokerage houses, for the holdings by brokers are smaller than at the end of the second quarter. In other words, investment holdings have increased, although the number of shareholders has declined. In August there were 78,452 holders of steel preferred.

RETAIL MARKET IS BUSY.

High-Priced Merchandise Well Absorbed, Despite Labor Unrest.

The trade reviews for the week state that, in spite of widespread disruption because of labor disturbances, business in the retail markets has been well sustained, with seasonable buying beginning to be felt as a result of the cooler weather.

Dun's Review says:

While consummation of commodities has perceptibly diminished in quarters where disbursement of wages has been appreciably reduced by idleness at various establishments, yet retail trade, as a whole, is remarkably well sustained, and an exceptional absorption of high-priced merchandise is a feature still commented upon in many directions.

The labor problem, however, not only remains an obstacle to the expansion of manufacturing facilities, but also prevents full production in many instances, and the disproportion between demand and supply finds sharp reflection in the allotment of outputs and the accentuated strength of some leading markets.

Bank clearings are maintained in remarkably heavy volume for this period, the total this week at twenty leading cities in the United States amounting to $6,391,341,838, an increase of 42.7 per cent. over this week last year and of 50.2 per cent. compared with the same week in 1917.

Bradstreet's says:

The trade and industrial effects of the coal strike in its early stages resemble very much those of its unsuccessful predecessor in the steel industry. Actual effects upon distribution are, except in purely coal mining regions, almost negligible. Concern is expressed whereas in some cases supplies of coal for future manufacturing needs are small, but reports from large consuming centres point to 30 to 60 days' supplies of fuel being available, and confidence is expressed that the strike will end before the extreme pinch comes.

The heartening effect upon business men of the strong stand taken by the Government to help order and to insure the nonunion mines, which employ a third of the soft coal miners, running, and the results of the Massachusetts election cannot be underestimated. It is felt that the tide has definitely turned in labor matters.

UNITED DRUG SALES RISE.

Company Reports a Net Increase of $6,000,000 for Nine Months.

For the nine months ended Sept. 30 the United Drug Company reports net sales of $41,465,199, an increase of more than $6,000,000 over the corresponding period of 1918. Before Federal taxes the surplus was $4,520,797, or the equivalent of more than $14 a share on the common stock after all second preferred has been converted. In the corresponding period of 1918 the surplus was $3,246,425.

Cash on hand increased from $1,881,755 in the report of June 30 to $4,094,838 on Sept. 30, and working capital increased from $11,390,981 to $18,367,881 in the same period. The balance sheet shows a reduction of the item patent processes, formulas, trademarks, and good-will by $576,497. It now stands at $22,920,078. The sale of V. Vivaudou, one of the subsidiaries, brought a net profit of $966,012.

Anaconda Copper Output Higher.

The October production of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company was 15,000,000 pounds, which is the highest reported since the January figures, which were 15,900,000 pounds. The minimum monthly production was 10,530,000 pounds in June. Output for the ten months ended with October was 131,482,000 pounds. This is at the rate of 161,482,000 pounds for the year. In 1918 the production was 293,003,726 pounds.

COTTON QUOTATIONS AGAIN SHOW LOSSES

Market Starts with Rally, but Turns Downward and Fails to Restore Gains.

SPOT COTTON STILL STRONG

Weather Map Continues Unfavorable—Export Clearances Total 41,512 Bales for the Day.

There was a better tone in yesterday's cotton market at the opening, and first prices showed overnight gains of 27 and 28 points in December and January and 8 to 16 points in the distant months. This improvement continued until the market was up 20 to 45 points, mainly in sympathy with the improvement in Liverpool and the strong situation in the Southern spot market, where prices ruled firm and demand continued big.

After the early high figures had been made new profit-taking sales appeared and the South sent in some hedge-selling orders and the market then reacted, falling back first to where it had left off on the previous night and then going through Thursday's closing figures as the selling continued. The distant months suffered worse than the near months, for as compared with net losses of 17 and 12 points in December and January, March sold off 44 points, July was down 48 points, and May was 38 points lower than on the previous day.

In the afternoon, however, the selling pressure gave way, and at that time some scattered trade buying rallied the market. But the rally was not long-lived and at the close there was another sharp break which took the list down to about the low prices of the day.

The news budget was rather bullish. In addition to the strength manifested abroad, the Southern markets were firm, as to quotation, and vigorous in volume. The demand for spot cotton, especially for the choice grades, continued unabated and spot cotton here was firm and unchanged in price.

The weather map was far from reassuring and the export clearances for the day, which totaled 41,512 bales, were the largest for a single day to be reported in some time. They brought the total for the full week up to 104,262 bales, against 77,900 bales out last week. All of yesterday's exports, which were out of Galveston and Savannah, were destined for Great Britain.

Yesterday's quotations follow:

TELLS HOW TO AID GERMANS

Leopold Zimmermann Would Give Credit for Cotton and Copper.

Leopold Zimmermann, head of Zimmermann & Forshay, who has just returned from an extended trip abroad, where he went to study the situation, said yesterday that, while conditions in Germany are still abnormal, living in that country is only about half as expensive as it is here. He advises that no one go abroad at this time, however, unless urged by the most pressing circumstances.

Mr. Zimmermann thinks Germany can be helped back to a normal pre-war state only if the United States extends to her liberal credits with which to purchase raw materials, especially copper and cotton. This, he thinks, will allow Germany to meet her obligations and will also prevent the spread of Bolshevism.

HARVARD FUND $9,228,176.

Drive for $15,250,000 Endowment Nears Two-third Mark.

Although only one-fourth of the Harvard graduates have been asked thus far to subscribe to the fund of $15,250,000 to be used in increasing the pay of Harvard professors, the Endowment Fund Committee reports that about two-thirds of the money has been gathered. The total now is $9,228,176, Boston leading with a subscription list of $3,657,446.

John W. Prentiss, Treasurer of the fund, announced that the average daily contributions were $300,000 for the first few weeks of the drive, but that the average had fallen this week to about $100,000. He urged all teams to redouble their efforts. One contributor yesterday was a member of the class of 1906, who had won $800 in scholarships during his academic career. He sent $1,000, saying that he would pay the "scholarship debt" with interest.

This company owns and operates 106 W. L. Douglas shoe stores located in the large cities. W. L. Douglas shoes are also sold by over 9,000 shoe dealers in the United States.

The past few years our shoes have been more extensively advertised than ever before. Stamping W. L. Douglas name and the retail price on the bottom of the shoes before they leave the factory has saved the wearers millions of dollars, and guarantees them the best shoes in style, comfort and service that can be produced for the price.

A great demand for W. L. Douglas shoes has sprung up in leading countries in Europe and Asia. Our domestic business has increased so that our sales have actually doubled in four years. In 1915 the sales were $8,089,628.41 and in 1918 $16,650,343.46. The past six months' business was at the rate of over $20,000,000 per year.

In common with other great businesses we need additional capital to meet the urgent requirements of increasing domestic and foreign trade. The new conditions of business also demand more capital. The cost of labor and material has nearly doubled so that twice the amount of capital necessary under the old business conditions is now required.

FLATBUSH PROTESTS AGAINST TWO FARES

Commissioner Nixon Hears Citizens and Promises Relief if He Has Jurisdiction.

COURTS TO SETTLE CASE

Complaints Made of Company Hiring "Strong-Arm" Men to Throw Passengers Off Cars.

The legal right of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company to charge a second fare on the Flatbush Avenue line at Foster Avenue was discussed yesterday at a hearing before Public Service Commissioner Lewis Nixon. Lewis H. Pounds, former President of Brooklyn Borough, expressed the opinion that the company had no right to charge a second fare for a continuous ride, and that Flatbush was apparently discriminated against, because other districts were exempt from the plural fare burden. He said that if the people were sure that the company was acting within its rights the trouble would cease, and the people would adjust themselves quietly to the new conditions.

Joseph T. Griffin of the Passenger Protective Association suggested that Mr. Nixon issue an order temporarily restraining the company from exacting a second fare, and that it should run until the matter could be settled by a court decision. Mr. Nixon replied by saying that he would inquire into the extent of his jurisdiction and that such an order as the one suggested would be issued if he had the authority.

On behalf of the company Colonel William N. Dykman contended that the present laws did not affect the rights obtained by the company in its charters and franchises, prior to 1884, to charge a double fare.

Arthur Willmott, a certified public accountant and Secretary of the Flatlands Civic Association, told Mr. Nixon that, while his association preferred a single fare, its members realized that a second fare might be necessary if the company intended to maintain an efficient service. In reply to questions by Assistant Corporation Counsel Vincent Victory, Mr. Willmott said that he did not believe the company was earning any profits because of the shrinkage of the purchasing power of the nickel.

One of the speakers asked that the company be restrained from using "strong-arm" men to throw passengers off the cars, but Mr. Nixon replied that all questions of law and order must be submitted to the police. It was understood that if Mr. Nixon issues an order restraining the company from charging a double fare, the matter will be taken at once to the courts. Mr. Nixon reserved decision until early next week.

Grover Whalen, Commissioner of Plants and Structures, criticised Mr. Nixon yesterday for the latter's reflections on the legality of the present method of the City Administration in operating the buses. Mr. Whalen stated that the transportation problem was a gigantic one, and that Mr. Nixon ought to help in solving it, and not in seeking to obstruct those engaged in the work. Mr. Whalen suggested that Mr. Nixon would serve the public better by preventing the Brooklyn City Railroad Company from charging a second fare than by raising "picayune obstacles in the path of the bus enterprise."

VIENNA SUFFERS IN COLD.

Fuel Shortage Increases Death Rate—Pedestrians Plunder Coal.

VIENNA, Nov. 5, (Associated Press.)—Five days of rain and snow, with a temperature around the freezing point, has caused much distress in Vienna. There is no fuel for heating, and there has been a rigid curtailment of lighting and street car service. It is reported by the hospital authorities that because of lack of heat the death rate in maternity cases is increasing.

Well-dressed men and women were attracted today by trucks filled with coal. They demanded to know for whom the fuel was intended. When they learned it was for the use of a citizen they surrounded the carts and began unloading them, the women turning up their skirts and filling them with coal, while the men crammed their overcoat pockets and dispatch cases. One large truck was emptied in this manner in a few minutes, the driver offering no objection. The police looked on.

Interference with supplies of food and other materials for Vienna and Lower Austria from the Province of Upper Austria was made permanent today by the action of the Diet of Upper Austria today, which refused to rescind its decrees imposing duties on exports and requiring permits for the transportation of supplies meant for other parts of Austria.

"It declared that only a court decision altering this would be accepted. The Diet also insisted on the right of the Province to enact legislation without reference to the Central Government.

DEBASING SILVER COINS.

Financial Experts Considering Reducing Amount of Metal in Them.

Advices from abroad state that the question of debasing silver coins has recently been discussed in leading financial circles, as a direct result of the sensational rise in the price of silver bullion. In France and Italy, it is said, it is now profitable to melt silver coins and export them to the United States, selling the bullion here at the market rate and remitting the proceeds to those countries by way of the foreign exchange market. According to René Léon, head of the bullion department of the Guaranty Trust Company, the French Government has taken steps to discourage the exporting of the metal. Commenting on the situation, Mr. Léon said:

"This is the situation as it exists today. Silver coinage was actually being melted down in France and exported until the Government put a stern stop to it. The Government, however, cannot prevent hoarding, and this practice is obviously current in France.

"Facing such a situation, Governments have three possible alternatives. The first is buying more silver. This is difficult in view of the scarcity of stocks. Moreover, additional silver coinage would only give increased opportunities for hoarding and melting, which are the very practices that it is desired to stop. Another suggested alternative is the withdrawal of silver coinage and the issuance of paper currency, but this is objected to as promoting inflation. A decrease of the metal reserve and a further issue of fiat money could serve only to send prices soaring and increasingly undermine the economic structure which it is the desire of all nations to buttress against further weakening.

"There remains only one possibility, and that is to reduce the amount of silver in the fractional coins, or, in other words, debase them. This is the solution which is now almost certainly being considered in France. Indeed, we have just had a cable on this very subject from Mr. Breton, Vice President of this company, who is now in Paris, in which he says: 'Silver purchases will not solve the problem and will lead to more unlawful transactions. The problem will probably be debated among leading countries and debasing will probably be discussed.'"

France Will Co-operate with Germany in Erecting a Customs Barrier

PARIS, Nov. 6.—A customs barrier will be established without delay, with the co-operation of the French authorities, between France and Germany, according to advices received from German newspapers.

The absence of a customs frontier between France, including Alsace-Lorraine, and the occupied regions of Germany has been a source of financial and economic embarrassment to the German Government, owing to the fact that goods brought into the occupied regions were easily smuggled into the rest of Germany.

CONTINUE GERMAN SCHOOLS

Poles Also Permit Freedom of Religious Teaching in Annexed Areas.

WARSAW, Nov. 6.—The Polish Government, in conformity with the terms of the Peace Treaty, has consented to the continuance of German schools in the former Prussian part of Poland in which the children of the German population may pursue their studies. These schools will be maintained as public schools at the expense of the State.

The German Evangelical Church, also in accordance with the terms of the treaty regarding protection of religious and racial minorities, will enjoy complete liberty as to religious teaching.

International Nickel Surplus Drops.

The International Nickel Company for the six months ended Sept. 30, reports a surplus, after charges, Federal taxes and preferred dividends, of $512,602, which is equivalent to 30 cents a share on the common stock. This amount represents a sharp falling off from the $3,415,905 in the corresponding period of last year, which was equivalent to $2.04 a share on the common. In the first six months of 1917 the balance available for the common was $4,384,396 and in 1916 it was $6,076,869.

EGGS.—7,885 cases. The market maintains the firm tone under continued light receipts and some scarcity of high quality fresh goods. For such prices rule slightly in sellers' favor and good medium qualities are taken a little more promptly than heretofore, although seriously defective held fresh are dull of sale and there are large accumulations of these that are still freely offered. Storage eggs in fair demand and steady. Nearby white eggs scarce in the highest grades. PALMER WANTS CURB ON STRIKE EXTENDED

Asks House to Continue Lever Act Six Months After Peace.

FEARS RISE IN FOOD PRICES

Attorney General Says President Has Power to Take Over the Coal Mines.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Attorney General Palmer urged the House Committee on Agriculture today to act immediately on his recommendation to extend the life of the Lever act for six months after peace is declared, so that the Government will not be weakened in its fight against the striking coal miners and food profiteers. He said the Government would be without adequate law to cope with the strike situation or the high cost of living if the wartime regulations carried in the Food Control act became void with the declaration of peace.

In reply to questions from Representatives concerning the coal strike the Attorney General said no legal steps except the Indianapolis injunction were under consideration. "The failure of the men to carry out the contract to work at a certain wage during the war is the primary cause of the strike," he said.

He declared the President had the power to "take over the coal mines if he saw fit." While fixing the price of food was allowable under the law, he knew of nothing that contemplated the use of that authority.

He predicted that prices would increase immediately after wartime regulations were lifted, and intimated that he might find it necessary at the end of six months to ask for the continuance of the Lever act for another six months.

It is generally believed the request will be granted in the House. Opposition in the Senate is stronger, but friends of the Administration say this will disappear when the true conditions are fully presented.

"Charts prepared by the War Industries Board show that the moment Federal control began the spread of prices of controlled and uncontrolled industries began to widen," said Mr. Palmer.

Prices of uncontrolled products were much higher than those of controlled products. Since the armistice prices have very largely increased.

"Of course, I do not contend that the use of this law will itself protect the people against high prices, or will result in any sweeping reduction in prices. In a large measure we know that the high cost of living is due to economic conditions which are worldwide in their scope and which are based upon conditions which must be changed before results are different. Another cause for increased prices is the pyramiding of credits. Nations have borrowed tremendous sums from their people and issued securities, borrowed again and issued securities, and repeated the process until we have an inflation of credit, conditions which the law-making department cannot change.

"Advantage is continually being taken of these conditions by unscrupulous persons, and right there is the necessity for this law. The necessity for it continues as long as these conditions continue. If it was wise to have this during the war in the public interest it is more necessary now.

"I would not like to see any part of the law repealed. I feel that it is better to have all of the law on the books, so that it may be enforced if conditions demand it. We have found it absolutely necessary to re-establish the Fuel Administration. If this coal strike situation should not clear up, it will undoubtedly be necessary to continue the Fuel Administration for some time. If the law went out of existence and we wished to prevent operators from increasing prices, as we are able to do under it, we would not be able to bring action against the operators.

"It seems to me that in view of the objections you have called attention to, it would be wiser to have the House and Senate pass a joint and concurrent resolution extending for six months the provisions of this law," interposed Representative Rubeyn, Democrat, Missouri.

"I think that is an excellent suggestion," said Mr. Palmer. "The quickest and easiest thing to do would be to extend the entire law. The main purpose of the extension is to deal with profiteering and hoarding and continue the control of the Fuel Administration."

TO SELL LIBRARY OF HENRY F. DE PUY

Collection Contains Valuable Books and Manuscripts Relating to America.

SALE WILL BEGIN NOV. 17

Volumes Dealing with History of New York Have Principal Place in Collection.

The library of Henry F. De Puy, considered the finest collection of Americana, particularly books relating to New York, ever offered at sale, will be dispersed at the Anderson Galleries on Nov. 17 and 18. Mr. De Puy has published many contributions to bibliography, notably "A Bibliography of the English Colonial Treaties with the American Indians." In a recent letter from Maryland, where he will make his future home, Mr. De Puy writes:

"My book collection began more than thirty-five years ago and at first was entirely confined to books relating to the Iroquois Indians. That naturally developed into Canadiana and to Colonial New York. I have gone into only a few lines outside of that. A good lot of contemporary pamphlets and broadsides on the United States Constitution, a collection of Indian Captivities, and another relating to the War of 1812 are the principal things outside of New York and Canadian books.

"Among the New York books I have succeeded in the course of years in getting some very complete lists of works on special topics. For instance Hamilton and Burr, Anti-Masonry, Oneida Community, Canals and Railways and boundary disputes. Among the Canadiana are nearly thirty contemporary titles relating to Lord Selkirk's Red River Settlement.

"I have never attempted to buy manuscripts unless they were of special interest, as, for instance, one of the two journals which give an account of the first time the American flag was under fire, Arnold's account of his treason, and Washington's announcement to the army of the signing of the treaty of peace."

The letter of Benedict Arnold is addressed to Lord North and is dated London, May, 1782. It is one of the greatest American documents that exists today, as it is the only place in which Arnold personally mentions his desertion and treason. He not only gives an account of his treason, but mentions the sum of £6,000 which he received. In addition he speaks of raising in New York "The American Legion" to be used against his former brother officers in America. He mentions also Mrs. Arnold and his family, how they had to flee from this country, and his brilliant prospects in the American colony. He appealed to Lord North to be placed on the British establishment, as his and Mrs. Arnold's pensions would be greatly inadequate for the support of his numerous family.

Pierre Boucher's "Histoire Veritable et Naturelle," Paris, 1664, is a fine copy of this rare work. It has a dedication dated from the "Ville des Trois Rivieres," where the author was Governor for the King of France. He was one of the oldest inhabitants of New France, and must have gone out with Champlain very early in the century. The copy comes from the library of Colbert, to whom the book is dedicated. The Church Catalogue cites but six copies, and prior to 1903 but five copies had appeared at auction. Since then the Sunderland copy has twice been resold, first at the Bourinot sale, when it went to Wilberforce Eames, and later at the sale of Mr. Eames's library, and the present copy, which came from the ... collection.

"Vreedon-Raedt," Amsterdam, 1649, is a rare tract, considered by Muller to be the most important document existing on the New Netherlands. "Amboyna," London, 1653, is another rarity. In March, 1653, some of the British settlers in New England claimed to have discovered a plot on the part of the Dutch in New Netherlands to hire the Indians to massacre all the British in New England. The so-called "Tragedy of Amboyna" was still fresh in the minds of the British, and when the news of this plot was published the above seemed a natural title for the book. This is the rarest book relating to New York. Only three copies appear to be known of—the present one, the Murphy-Kalbfleisch-Church copy, and one in the British Museum. It is the first book in English wholly about New York, being printed seventeen years earlier than Denton's "Description." Earlier references to New York are in English books printed before 1653, but they are all general works.

First Account of New York.

There is also an exceptional copy of Daniel Denton's "New York," published in London in 1670. This is the first account of this city printed in English with the imprint absolutely intact. Nearly all the known copies have the last line of the imprint cut away. The present copy is larger than that in the Halsey Library. Louis Bridel's "Le Pour" is one of the rarest of New York pamphlets. Edmund Burke's "A Complete History of the Late War," London, 1765, is rare. There was no copy of it in the Americana collections of Menzies, Barlow, or Ives, and the Brinley copy was imprinted. William Burnet's "Essay on Scripture Prophecy," New York, 1724, is the first production of the William Bradford Press.

A series of eighteen autograph letters by Aaron Burr, bound in one volume and written at Amsterdam or New York from Aug. 7, 1811, to March 8, 1816, are all addressed to John Vanderlyn, a well-known portrait painter, who by Burr's generosity had been enabled to pursue his studies in Paris and Rome. "A Shorte and Briefe Narration of the Two Navigations and Discoveries to the North West Partes Called Newe France," by Jacques Cartier, translated into English by John Florio, London, 1580, is one of the earliest books relating to Canada and the first book in English on the Iroquois Indians. "Les Voyages" of Samuel de Champlain, Paris, 1613, is the rare first edition, with 52 additional pages containing a fourth voyage, 1613, not mentioned in the index. The map facing Page 160 was the first of the coast line of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and New England in which any attempt was made to lay down astronomical positions, and is rarely found with the work.

Charles Chauncey's "Letter to a Friend," Boston, 1755, is so rare that but one copy, the Brinley-Murphy one has appeared at auction. William Colbreath's manuscript "Journal of the Most Material Occurences Proceeding the Siege of Fort Schuyler" is an important manuscript on American Revolutionary matters. Cadwallader Colden's "History of the Five Indian Nations," New York, 1727, is the original edition, and all that was ever published in this country. "A View of the Present Situation of the Western Part of New York, called the Genessee Country," Fredericktown, 1804, by Ignatius Davis, is a little work of great rarity, and apparently the only copy which has occurred at public auction. It comes from the Hurst's Library, and was unknown to Sabin. There was no copy in the Church collection.

"A Declaration of Independence by the Congress at Philadelphia in 1776," published in New York in 1781, is the original unbound and uncut edition. It appears to be the first offering of this important piece at auction in at least thirty years. "Vertoogh Van Nieu-Nederland," by Adrian van der Donck, published at Graven-Hage in 1650, is one of the most important works on the history of New Netherland published up to that year. His "Beschryvinge Van Nieuw-Nederlant," Amsterdam, 1655, is the excessively rare edition.

"Cesariensis Episcopi Chronicon," by Eusebius, published in 1512, is of great importance to the Americana collector, as it contains the first printed reference to the Canadian Indians. There was no ... the collections of Church or ... "Animadversory Address to the inhabitants of Vermont," Hartford, 1778, has at the foot of the title the autograph of Colonel Ethan Allen, "To be Delivered to the Hon'ble Brig. Gen. Stark." A rare broadside relates to the Battle of Lake Tuargo on Sept. 8, 1755. Another rare broadside is "A Proclamation" by Governor William Tryon, New York, Dec. 11, 1771. Of the "Abbreviate of Holland's Deliverance By, and Ingratitude To the Crown of England and to the House of Nassau," London, 1665, by E. Cliffe, is rare. The writer refers to the West Indies Company and to Virginia and to New England. There is also an account of the settlement of New Netherland by the Dutch in 1674. Only one other copy is known.

5 HELD FOR BOSTON CRIME.

Men Arrested Yesterday Accused of Robbing Paymaster of $12,000.

A private detective who was watching a man wanted in Boston, caused the arrest yesterday of five men sought by the Boston police in connection with the hold up of a paymaster in that city, who was robbed of $12,000. Detective John Graham was trailing John Reynolds, when he saw him join another man and walk with him to a furnished room house in West Fiftieth Street. The detective decided they had gone to join other men, so he notified Police Headquarters. The police besides arresting the men, said they had also found evidence at the house that would tend to connect the prisoners with the Boston robbery.

The prisoners gave their names and occupations as Matthew Smith, naval aviator, 35 Cottage Street, Boston; Fred McHughes, janitor, 51 Dexter Street, Dorchester, Mass.; John Reynolds, machinist, 1 Errich Street, Neponsit, Mass.; James Quinn, chauffeur, 107 Union Park, Boston, and George H. Sheehan, a waiter, 1,513 Washington Avenue, Boston. They were charged with being fugitives from justice.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 7.—The hold-up for which five men were arrested in New York today was that of a paymaster of the Bakers and Grocers Association in this city three months ago. The paymaster had drawn $12,000 from the Fidelity Trust Company and was on his way to the Association's office in a taxicab, accompanied by a messenger, when the car was stopped in Albany Street by another taxicab. Four or five young men got out of the second car, stole the money and escaped.

BOWERY MISSION PRAISED.

Governor and Bishop Burch Speak at Fortieth Anniversary Exercises.

Governor Alfred E. Smith and Bishop Burch of New York were the principal speakers last night at the exercises marking the fortieth anniversary of the Bowery Mission. Both congratulated the mission on its splendid record accomplished in twoscore years of work among the poor of the city. John J. Hallimond, Superintendent, presided. Bishop Burch complimented Governor Smith for his interest in the spiritual as well as the material welfare of people of the State. He said that the old saying that Church and State were not really one was untrue; that there was an indivisible union between the two.

Governor Smith agreed with the Bishop in his assertion that Church and State were in reality one and spoke of the tremendous power such a union exercised in behalf of the city, State and nation. The Governor spoke highly of the mission's work, and told how as a boy he had seen the hungry fed and jobs found for the unemployed by the organization.

ENDS HER LIFE WITH RAZOR.

Brooklyn Woman Became Despondent When Son Went to War.

Suffering from melancholia, Mrs. Julia Conner, 50 years old, of 166 Barbey Street, Brooklyn, committed suicide by cutting her throat with a razor in the bedroom of her home late yesterday, according to the police. Benjamin F. Conner, the husband, is head of the Conner, Fendler & Co., printers' supplies, Manhattan, and the home is in the Arlington section of East New York.

The woman, it is said, became melancholy when Lincoln, the youngest of three sons, who served with the 306th Artillery 77th Division was drafted. Although the lad returned home uninjured, her condition did not improve, it is said.

Mrs. Conner was to have acted as hostess at a card party which was to have been given by Lincoln last night. She told her sister, Mrs. Selma Ihseen, that she was going to dress, went to the bathroom, evidently to obtain the razor and then to her bedroom, where she is alleged to have taken her life.

TO AVOID UTILITY STRIKES.

Merchants' Association Indorses Towne's Legal Contract Plan.

The Merchants' Association has submitted to the Chamber of Commerce of the United States for referendum vote a plan for the prevention of strikes by employes of public utility corporations.

The plan, which was submitted to the Merchants' Association by Henry R. Towne, Chairman of the Board of the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Company, provides that service shall be regulated by law, so that each person who enters employment shall be legally obligated by contract to continue for a specified time. During the prescribed period he cannot lawfully quit nor may he be discharged except according to the provisions of the contract.

Resolutions adopted by the Merchants' Association say that the functions of public utilities, exercised only by public authorization, become public agencies and should be controlled by law in the public interest. To obtain this result, the resolution says, continuous and uninterrupted operation must be maintained, and therefore strikes should be guarded against by law.

100 NAVY MEN BECALMED.

Group Asks Knights of Columbus's Aid to Expedite Discharge.

About 100 naval aviation men at Montauk Point, who are still held in the service because their service records were lost, have appealed to William P. Larkin, Overseas Director of the Knights of Columbus, to use his influence to have the Navy Department speed up the search that is being made for their papers. In the meantime they are held at camp with restricted privileges and paid $2 a day, which they cannot spend.

The men were enlisted for service during the war. They have been engaged in operating with the seaplane and balloon service of the navy along the shore of Long Island. They include mechanics, tool men and tenders. When it was time for demobilizing them their officers found it impossible to do so, as regulations provide that no man can leave the service without having his service record properly indorsed.

Held for Running Over Child.

Miss Eunice Allen, a teacher, 24 years old, of 2,565 Grand Concourse and Boulevard, the Bronx, was held in $500 bail yesterday by Magistrate Edgar V. Frothingham in the Morrisania Court on an affidavit alleging suspicion of felonious assault. It is alleged by Patrolman Charles Ahearn of the Bathgate Avenue Station that an automobile driven by the defendant struck down Lino Lambert, a 9-year-old schoolgirl, of 2,376 Ryer Avenue, yesterday morning at 184th Street and Grand Concourse. The injured child was taken to Fordham Hospital.

France Honors Dr. Robert L. Kelly.

Dr. Robert L. Kelly, Executive Secretary of the Association of American Colleges, received official notice yesterday that he had been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor by the French Government for his services in arranging for the exchange of French and American college students. Dr. Kelly is now head of the Educational Division of the Interchurch World Movement. He was formerly President of Earlham College, Richmond, Ind.

REAL ESTATE FIELD

In the fire insurance district, where rentable space is at a premium, Foot & Martin yesterday purchased the fourteen-story fireproof office building at 46 Cedar Street from the Continental Insurance Company. The deal also included the three-story building at 42 Cedar Street, which permanently insures the light protection of the taller structure. The larger building stands on a plot 78.3 by 78.3 by irregular, and the parcel at 42 Cedar Street measures 20.7 by 48.

The property was the former home office of the Continental Insurance Company, and it is understood the price was $1,500,000.

The property adjoins the southwest corner of Cedar and William Streets and is opposite the large buildings of the Mutual Life Insurance Company. Albert B. Ashforth, Inc., negotiated the transaction.

Broadway-John Street Corporation Resells on Front Street and Buys on Liberty Street.

The Broadway-John Street Corporation, Elias A. Cohen, President, has resold to William E. Peck & Co. 136 to 140 Front Street, a seven-story building, occupying the front from Pine to De Peyster Street and covers a plot 59 by 63. The purchasers after extensive improvements will occupy five floors. The Financial Chronicle, which has been a tenant in the building for many years, will continue to occupy the remaining two floors on a long-term lease. The total investment will be about $400,000. Charles F. Noyes & Co. were the brokers in the sale.

The Broadway-John Street Corporation also purchased from Hester A. Bonta and Adolph L. Gondran 142 and 144 Liberty Street and 151 and 153 Cedar Street, abutting, between Washington and West Streets. On the Liberty Street end is a five-story structure with stores, on a plot 50 by 55, and on Cedar Street there are two five-story buildings, on a plot 44 by 55. The property is to be altered by Mr. Cohen. Cammann, Voorhees & Floyd were the brokers.

Illustrated maps have been prepared showing the designs and plans of houses, together with the prices, so that the uninitiated may visualize at a glance what style of house he prefers.

A MESSAGE FROM A TELEPHONE OPERATOR TO GIRLS SEEKING EMPLOYMENT.

"When I was ready to enter business I decided that the occupation I chose would have to have a future in it for me. The pay should be good and be increased at reasonable intervals. The organization into which I went not only must provide an opportunity for me to advance myself but must show willingness to help me get ahead. The work must be clean and interesting and devoid of unpleasant influences. It had to be done in clean, well-ventilated rooms. The working hours had to be reasonable. If I became sick during employment I felt that I should be protected against loss of pay. I wanted to be assured that my employer would look after my comfort and convenience both when at work and when off duty. And if the business I entered required preliminary training I felt that my employer should pay me for that preparation.

"Telephone operating met every one of my requirements. So I have this message for young women 16 to 35 years of age who seek steady, worth-while employment: Find out about telephone operating and do it today."

C. The commission states that there were not as many applicants for the October examinations for these positions as were expected, and that several thousand appointments are to be made to each of the positions mentioned. THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Pressure is low over the interior districts west of the Rocky Mountains, with a well-defined centre of depression over Western Colorado. Elsewhere pressure is high, decidedly so, as a rule, but, notwithstanding the general high pressure, cloudy weather prevails throughout the United States, except in the Pacific States and along the South Atlantic Coast. There were light rains in the upper lake region, the Ohio Valley, and Tennessee. Light local showers in Texas, light snows over the low-pressure region in the extreme west, and rains in the North Pacific States.

It is considerably cooler in the West Gulf States, West Montana, Idaho, Utah, and Nevada, and warmer in the lakes. Elsewhere temperatures remain nearly normal.

Cloudy weather will continue east of the Mississippi during the next forty-eight hours with rain probable by Sunday in the East Gulf States, Tennessee, the Ohio Valley, and the upper lake region, with possibly some snow in the northern upper lake region.

There will be no extensive temperature changes.

Winds off the Atlantic Coast: North of Sandy Hook, moderate north, fair weather; Sandy Hook to Hatteras, moderate north and northeast, cloudy weather; Hatteras to Florida Straits, moderate northeast, generally fair weather; East Gulf Coast, gentle to moderate east, generally fair; West Gulf Coast, moderate east and southeast, partly cloudy to cloudy weather.

CHURCHES PROPOSE NEW CABINET OFFICE

Ask for National Department of Education, with a Secretary.

URGE ACTION BY CONGRESS

Secretary Kelly Gives Credit for Winning the War to University Men of Allied Nations.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Nov. 7.—Passage of the Smith-Towner bill for the creation of a National Department of Education with a Secretary of Education in the Cabinet, and united efforts by Protestant bodies to obtain favorable action by Congress on the measure, was urged by Walter S. Athearne of Boston University tonight at the National "Training School" of the Inter-Church World Movement of North America. A national program of religious education, he declared, should include the creation of community religious education in which the churches would use music, art, drama, and recreation as agencies for spiritualizing the ideals of the whole community.

Robert L. Kelly of Chicago, Secretary of the General Board of Church Education, declared that the university men of the United States and the allied nations had won the war. He said that 60 per cent. of the students now in the universities of France are women, when before the war there were comparatively few. Seventy per cent. of the students in American universities, both private and State, and in the technical and professional schools, are members of Protestant churches, he asserted.

George C. Mahy, of Philadelphia, of the New Era Movement of the Presbyterian Church, led a discussion on American home life, and painted a pessimistic picture, and declared that the churches must actively unite to put American homes back on a healthy basis.

"Christian householders who prefer to let rooms to men rather than to working girls, and church and parish house janitors who keep the doors locked against young people because the carpets might be muddied," were arraigned by Mrs. Fred S. Bennet of New York City, President of the National Council of Women for Home Missions.

Mrs. Bennet, who is engaged in an investigation of the girls' housing condition in industrial centres, condemned "the church people who refuse their rooms to working girls because the latter want to press clothes and use a little electricity."

They were invited to meet and discuss topics of common interest relating to organization, research, production, and merchandising. A dinner was given for the clients at the Waldorf last night.

THIEVES OVERLOOK $110,000

Burglars Get Silverware in Home of Mrs. P. D. Langdon and Miss Bonds.

Burglars overlooked securities valued at $110,000 on Thursday night in their anxiety to carry away large bundles of furs and silverware from the home of Mrs. Paul D. Langdon, at 140 West Fifty-eighth Street. In the package of securities were Liberty bonds and other unregistered bonds that could have been negotiated easily.

When Mrs. Langdon returned from a concert she found her bedroom window open and the furniture so disarranged that she decided to call the police. In one of the rooms was a large bundle of furs, linens, and silverware. The burglars apparently had been frightened away before they had been able to finish their job. Closer examination of the apartment disclosed that only $1,500 worth of silver and jewels had been taken. A drawer containing the securities apparently had not been opened.

A policeman's curiosity prevented four thieves escaping with silks, satins, and linens valued at $25,000 which they had stolen from Burh Terminal, Brooklyn, on Thursday night. Patrolman Gerry, walking post on Clinton Street, near Fulton Street, saw a large, heavily loaded truck approach on Clinton Street. He stopped it and questioned the four men who were on it. Three of them ran, and the fourth was arrested. He said he was James Ward of 69 Cranberry Street, Brooklyn.

Coroner Scouts Theory That Dansey Boy Perished in Barn.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Nov. 7.—By direction of District Attorney Aldrich ashes in the ruins of a barn at Perry's Corners are to be sifted in an effort to find a clue to the identity of the person or persons believed to have perished when the barn burned.

Coroner Gard believes bones found were those of a man, woman, and child. He scouts the theory that "Billy" Dansey, the missing New Jersey boy, was one of the victims.

RALPH GREENLEAF FREED.

Billiardist and Manager Not Wanted in Binkowitz Murder.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 7.—Ralph Greenleaf, the expert pocket billiardist, who was detained here last night in connection with the efforts of the authorities to solve the murder of Benjamin Binkowitz, was released this noon after being under examination for a short time by Coroner Mix of New Haven. George Worden of New York, who is Greenleaf's manager, was also released. Both men returned to this city this afternoon to continue their exhibition games.

According to a statement issued from the office of Coroner Mix today, the men were not arrested, but simply detained as witnesses. On the other hand, Sergeant Frank Virelli of the State Police, says that he took the two men into custody on orders from Coroner Mix, but further than that he knew nothing of the case.

Greenleaf was playing an exhibition game of pocket billiards in a local billiard parlor last night, and at the conclusion of the game State Policeman Virelli placed him and his manager under arrest. They spent the night in a cell. Both men were taken to New Haven this morning, and shortly after their interview with the Coroner returned to the city. They say that their arrest was a blunder and that they would have gone before Coroner Mix voluntary if they had known that their presence or testimony was wanted.

Complete-To-Wear Overcoats (Ready-To-Slip-Right-On)

Tailored By A Tailor

Not Just Retailed By A Retailer

WE SUPPLEMENT the Greatest Idea, which ever dignified Clothing, with the Greatest Assortment in Greater New York. As this is our first season in Ready-To-Wear Clothes, everything here is new, as befits a debutante. We are not running an Old Goods' Home, where discontinued models and rejected colors dream of a vanished vogue. The "Shapelee" and the "Stovepipe" Overcoats are our own ultra-exclusive custom innovations.

As concerns wear, most "Warmth-Without-Weight" Overcoats ought to be re-christened, "Warmth-Without-Wear." The nap rubs off from the soft, spongy wool around edges, pockets and sleeves. You don't catch Clemons Overcoats napping, because they are Long-Staple Pure Virgin Wool. They wear like sixty, even if the price amounts to a mere $40 or $50.

Take Brown! Most clothiers show a handful—we show a storeful. That's because they are dependent upon what the clothing manufacturer doles out. We are independent of any manufacturer, having our own stocks of uncut woollens to draw upon for Complete-To-Wear Overcoats.

No end of Browns—and Greens—and Blues—and Grays—and every other color that they say is scarce. You won't say so when you see our towering stocks.

SWEEP IN SENATE FOR RESERVATION ON WITHDRAWAL

Vote of 50 to 35 for Asserting Right to Judge Fulfillment of Our League Obligations.

BACKED BY FIVE DEMOCRATS

Solid Republican Vote Lines Up, Though McCumber and Nelson Assail Plan.

LENROOT TAUNT RESENTED

He Charges Democratic Subserviency to Wilson—Fail to Save President's Veto.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—After a stubborn fight by the minority, the Senate, by a vote of 50 to 35, adopted late today the reservation offered by the Foreign Relations Committee majority, under which the United States declares the right to be the sole judge, in the event of its withdrawal from the League of Nations, as to whether its obligations to the League have been fulfilled.

Had all the Senators who were unable to vote because of being paired or absent cast their votes, the result would have shown every one of the forty-nine Republican Senators in favor of the reservation, together with six Democrats, making an aggregate of fifty-five Senators for the reservation and forty-one against it.

The vote, in the view of the Republican leaders, indicates that the Lodge majority has the reservation situation firmly in hand and that nearly all, if not all of fifteen reservations on its program, will be voted as a part of the resolution of ratification.

Senator Lodge, commenting on the vote, said:

"The majority reservations, it now appears, are to be adopted, at least nearly all of them, just as they were drafted by the committee. If the Democrats vote down the resolution of ratification with the reservations embraced in it, as they threaten, they will vote down the treaty. They will have no way, after that, of resurrecting it."

Text of the Reservation.

The reservation adopted today reads:

"The United States so understands and construes Article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant, have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States."

A long but futile battle was staged by the Administration forces and by Senator McCumber of North Dakota, and Nelson of Minnesota, to have the reservation changed to provide for a joint resolution of Congress, instead of a concurrent resolution, so that the President might have a voice in the question of withdrawal.

Efforts were also made by the minority to strike out all mention of a concurrent or joint resolution, giving Congress the option to proceed as it deemed fit. These were likewise defeated.

On the final vote, although Senators McCumber and Nelson had assailed the proposal for a concurrent resolution, contending that it was a deliberate affront to the President, in taking away the veto power he had under the Constitution, they voted for the reservation exactly as it was offered by the majority.

An unexpected vote in favor of the reservation was that of Senator Chamberlain, Democrat, of Oregon, who, supporting it, broke away for the first time from the Administration alignment. Senator Chamberlain said later that he intended to vote for others of the committee reservations.

This was the vote by which the reservation was adopted:

Republican Wins Oklahoma District on League Issue

Special to The New York Times.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Nov. 8.—The Fifth Congressional District, heretofore Democratic, elected today J. W. Harreld, Republican, of Oklahoma City, to Congress, over Claude Weaver, Democrat.

Returns from 236 precincts out of 263 gave Harreld 11,819 and Weaver 10,779.

Weaver made his campaign on the record of the Administration, speaking for the League Covenant without reservation or amendment. Harreld took the attitude of the "mild reservationist" Republicans in the Senate.

J. B. Thompson, whose death caused the special election, carried the district last year by 4,500 plurality. The district has never elected a Republican Congressman before.

GRAND JURORS FEAR SECRET SHADOWERS

Extraordinary Precautions Are Taken to Prevent Revelations of Activities.

SUSPECT WIRES ARE TAPPED

Room Searched Daily for Dictaphones — Doors Are Heavily Guarded Between Sessions.

The suspicion of some if not all members of the Extraordinary Grand Jury that they were being subjected to some form of espionage by private detectives or others, it was rumored at the Criminal Courts Building yesterday, has brought about unusual precautions for safeguarding the jury's deliberations and for the maintenance of secrecy concerning the details of the investigation, which is believed to affect some important departments of the city administration, including the police.

It was said that one of the precautions taken to prevent any possibility of secrets of the Grand Jury room leaking out consisted of a daily inspection before the sessions began of the entire room to see if a dictaphone or any other "listening" device had been concealed in the absence of the jurymen. So far no evidence of tampering has been found. The jury was not in session yesterday. The room was kept locked and guarded on the outside by court officers and no one was permitted to enter it.

According to the best information obtainable the suspected "shadowers" of the jurymen have not been identified or seen at close quarters, because they have been alert in their work and have kept at a safe distance. These suspects are supposed to represent some persons who have peculiar personal interest in features of the work of the jury. This situation, it is said, has caused the jurymen to exert every caution to prevent information of their proceedings reaching any one outside the body.

Several of the jurors were said to have suspected that their telephone wires had been tapped, or that attempts had been made to cut-in on their wires at some unknown point. This situation has caused the jurors to shun the telephone almost completely for conversations among themselves and about all matters relating to their activities. It is expected that the jury will take up the question of looking into these suspicions regarding alleged wire-tapping and the shadowing.

No confirmation of the reports of the alleged wire tapping and the "shadowing" could be obtained yesterday, either from any one of the jurymen or the District Attorney or his assistants. But rumor persisted that there was foundation for the reported suspicions of the jurymen, and in this connection it was asserted that several of the jurymen were meeting the situation by changing their places of abode to temporary lodgings in clubs and hotels. It was also reported that the jury might hire trusted men to guard them until the conclusion of the investigation.

Apparently District Attorney Swann is personally out of touch with the jury. He has assigned Assistant District Attorney Unger to be their legal adviser, while Assistant District Attorney J. E. Smith is supposed to be aiding in the police end of the inquiry.

It is believed that the jury is looking into information of a political and administrative nature having to do with some features of the transit situation. No intimation has come from the jury concerning the connection that the reported inquiry into police matters has to do with the transit affairs, but conclusions drawn from the presence of some witnesses are that this feature may have something to do with either politics or city administrative activity.

It is known that the continuation of the investigation, the end of which is not in sight, means considerable personal inconvenience to all of the jurymen, and financial loss to most of them by neglect of their business interests, and they have expressed a desire that the inquiry be pressed to a conclusion as speedily as possible. All have agreed, however, to permit no personal consideration to interfere with the completion of the work they have undertaken.

TO QUIZ 60 CLOTHING MEN.

Illinois Prosecutor Seeks Evidence from Alleged Union Victims.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Subpoenas for sixty manufacturers of men's clothing alleged to have been victimized by members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, today were in the hands of deputies from the State Attorney's office. Because of alleged threats a number of the manufacturers have refused to talk and their identity of those named in the subpoenas was withheld, said Nicholas Michels, Assistant State Attorney, in charge of the investigation.

Mr. Michels said that since the headquarters here of the union was raided two days ago and papers and books seized showing nearly $2,000,000 had been collected during the last two years from manufacturers as "penalties and fines," he has been followed by "strong-arm" men and once stood off an attack with a pistol.

Mr. Michels asserted he would seek at least a dozen indictments.

More Than 200, Seized Friday, Must Leave Country—60 More Taken in Bridgeport.

Seventy-three radical headquarters in all five boroughs of this city were raided simultaneously last night for evidence of revolutionary propaganda by more than 700 policemen and various agents of the Federal and State Governments acting under the authority of search warrants issued by Chief Magistrate McAdoo to the Lusk Committee.

After lawyers for the committee had completed a canvass of some 500 prisoners at Police Headquarters at 1 o'clock this morning, they directed the police to hold about 100 men on charges of criminal anarchy and release the rest. Radical literature by the ton was confiscated by the police.

Among the places raided were editorial offices, meeting rooms, and printing shops, from which issued a large part of the revolutionary propaganda which has made its effect felt in Gary, Omaha, Seattle, and other centres of industrial disturbance, according to testimony before the Lusk Committee.

The places raided were all connected with the so-called "Communist Party," the group of radicals which has broken away from the Socialist Party and attempted to form a union of anarchists, I. W. W., syndicalists, and all other violent groups of radicals. The addresses of the seventy-three places, many of which are the editorial rooms of radical publications, were furnished by Associate Counsel Archibald E. Stevenson and Charles F. Donnelly of the Lusk Committee, who appeared yesterday morning before Magistrate McAdoo and obtained search warrants for the raids. Members of the New York State Constabulary took part in the raids.

One of the first prisoners brought in by them was the famous "Jim" Larkin, the Irish labor agitator, who led the shipping strike in England in 1914. Larkin, who is regarded as one of the most dangerous of the agitators in this country, was arrested in McDougall Alley.

Simultaneous Raids in Five Boroughs.

The plans for the raids were kept secret with great care, and shortly after 9 o'clock the raids started in all five boroughs. The raiders included members of the anarchist, narcotic and Italian squads, plainclothes men, 700 men in uniform, agents of the Department of Justice, inspectors of the Immigration Service, and the State Constabulary. The police were directed by Inspector Faurot, and the entire movement was directed by State Senator Clayton R. Lusk, whose committee has been for months accumulating evidence on the radical propaganda in this State.

The Lusk Committee made public last night a list of the places raided, and the branches of the Communist Party described in the list include Lettish, Esthonian, Lithuanian, Ukrainian, Jewish, Russian, Hungarian, German, Spanish, and Italian.

Fifty radical publications in various foreign languages, which are printed in this city, are the backbone of the Red movement in this country, according to Deputy Attorney General Berger, and many of these were raided last night. One of the purposes of th raids was to gather evidence as to the future plans for causing outbreaks like those in Seattle and at Gary, which have been laid largely to inflammatory publications, printed in this city, with the aid, according to Mr. Berger, of wealthy parlor Bolsheviki of New York City.

After the raids started patrol wagons and Brooklyn, mainly breaking into the drove up to Police Headquarters and policemen began to stagger in under the weight of the Red literature which they

Outbreaks in Italian Cities on Bolshevist Anniversary

ROME, Nov. 8, (Associated Press.)—Disorders broke out at Milan and Genoa as a result of Socialist celebrations of the anniversary of the Russian revolution by which the Bolsheviki came into power.

Shots were fired and many arrests were made at Milan, where the Socialists clashed with former soldiers. Troops at Genoa dispersed processions of Socialists carrying red flags and pictures of Lenin.

The Socialists organized a strike in Turin and tried to hold a meeting, but were dispersed by charges of cavalry. Several hundred of them were arrested, including Signor Rabezzina, Socialist candidate in the coming elections.

In Florence the Socialists held a meeting, at which, owing to disorders, the police intervened. Troops eventually established order.

The Socialists of Rome held a meeting, but were dispersed by the police.

GEN. WOOD LEADS IN CONGRESS POLL

Republicans Give Views as to Who Will Be Their Probable Nominee for President.

136 ARE RECORDED FOR HIM

His Total Exceeds All Others'—Palmer and Baker Expected to Announce Candidacies.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—A confidential poll of Congress made by The Cincinnati Enquirer indicates that General Leonard Wood is strongly favored for the Republican Presidential nomination. He received more preference than all of the other candidates combined in the answers to this question:

"Who, in your opinion, will be the nominee of the Republican Party for President in 1920?"

Assurance was given to members that their replies would be treated confidentially and that only the general result would be made known.

The poll showed the following:

House.—General Wood, 116; Governor Frank O. Lowden, 41; Senator James E. Watson, 23; Senator Warren G. Harding, 22; Senator Hiram Johnson, 6; William H. Taft, 3; General Pershing, 2; Senator Philander C. Knox, 1; Governor William C. Sproul, 1; noncommittal, 15. Absent, 7.

Senate.—General Wood, 20; Senator Harding, 4; Senator Johnson, 4; Senator Watson, 3; Senator Poindexter, 2; Charles E. Hughes, 1; Senator Borah, 1; Senator Kellogg, 1; Senator Spencer, 1; Senator Edge, 1; Senator Sutherland, 1; General Pershing, 1; noncommittal, 5.

The poll, it is said, showed that the New England Republican Congressmen were almost unanimous for Wood, who was born in New Hampshire and educated at Harvard University.

The members from New York State also showed a strong preference for General Wood, due, it is surmised, to the Plattsburg movement and his association with the late Colonel Roosevelt. Fifteen New York members expressed a preference for him, one for Lowden, one for Watson, one for Taft, one for Pershing, and three were noncommittal.

Nineteen members of the House from Pennsylvania declared for Wood. Lowden had one supporter from that State, Harding one, Knox one, and Sproul one.

After the meetings of the Republican and Democratic National Committees here next month national politics will be in full swing. These meetings will be held chiefly to decide upon the convention cities. Chicago seems to have the lead for the Republican convention, with Cleveland, Indianapolis, St. Louis, and San Francisco seeking the Democratic convention.

An effort will be made at the Democratic meeting to put through a resolution favoring the repeal of the two-thirds rule for the nomination of a Presidential candidate. The leading members of the committee are reported to be against such a move.

After this meeting or shortly before it is expected that President Wilson will let it be known in a rather formal way that he will not seek another nomination. This will be the signal for the announcement of the candidacy of Attorney General Palmer for the Democratic nomination, and perhaps Secretary Baker will permit his name to go before his own State, Ohio.

LABOR CHIEFS SURPRISED

Gompers and Others Discomfited by Failure in Indianapolis.

REPORT CONFERENCE CALL

Summoning of Federation Officials May Precede Appeal to President.

STRIKE COLLAPSE EXPECTED

Coal to be Allowed to Foreign Ships Not Carrying Cargo Fuel.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, and Edgar Wallace, the official representative of the Western Federation of Miners in Washington, were in a gloomy frame of mind today after they learned that Judge Anderson had issued his mandate directing the leaders of the miners to call off the strike. They refused to comment upon the new situation.

It was reported tonight that Mr. Gompers had sent out a call to members of the Executive Committee of the American Federation of Labor to confer with him tomorrow in Washington, and that an appeal might be made to President Wilson before Tuesday night. There was also a report that William Green, Secretary of the Western Federation of Miners, was on his way from Indianapolis to Washington to join the conference. This could not be confirmed.

The decision of President Wilson and his Cabinet as emphasized by the proceedings at Indianapolis, and the attitude assumed here by the Department of Justice is believed to have been more of a disappointment to the leaders of the miners and to President Gompers than they are willing to admit. Even after President Wilson issued his statement on Oct. 25, in which he denounced the strike as illegal and immoral, the labor leaders expected to find some measure of comfort at the hands of the Government.

When the White House gave firm support to Attorney General Palmer, the union leaders looked next to Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson in the hope that he might help to stay the injunction proceedings. They did not give up hope that Secretary Wilson might bring relief until late last night when, after the fourth Palmer-Gompers conference, the Attorney General made his position plain and is reported to have told Gompers that the strike would be broken.

Expect Recall of Strike Order.

Government officials are of the belief that the order recalling the strike will be issued by the officers of the United Mine Workers before the time limit set by the court expires. This belief is founded partly upon information said to be at hand that thousands of miners are restive and anxious to have the strike ended and that Lewis and his fellow officials will not at this time decide to defy the Government to the point of disregarding a court order backed up by the White House and the Department of Justice.

There was some discussion here as to what course the mass of the mine workers might pursue in the event that the order calling off the strike was issued by Acting President Lewis. Reports from the coal mining districts were accepted as indicating that the large majority of miners, even in the central competitive districts, which include Western Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, would return to work.

The Department of Justice, it is understood, is preparing to make public a report on the various negotiations which have been conducted since the Government took the strike situation into the courts. This probably would include the facts concerning what took place in connection with the conference between Attorney General Palmer and Samuel Gompers and also the attitude which was assumed throughout by Acting President Lewis of the miners, when he was consulted by telephone. Such a summary, it is said, would show that the officials of the mine workers balked all attempts to bring about a settlement by refusing to consider rescinding the strike order and would listen to no proposition which involved an ending of the strike prior to negotiations.

More Coal for Shipping.

Comfort was extended to shipping and industrial interests today by an unofficial announcement that bunker fuel will now be granted to vessels flying foreign flags which are not engaged in carrying cargoes of coal. Huge consignments of export goods are piling up at the ports and the decision has been made to relieve this situation. That a permanent policy of this kind will be adopted, however, is by no means certain yet.

The situation in regard to shipping, it

Court Says Coal Strike Threatens the Republic; One Strike Leader Expresses His Defiance

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—Judge Anderson, in granting the injunction today ordering the recall of the coal strike order, said:

"This case involves solely the question of enforcing the law. It is my absolute duty to uphold the law, which no one man and no body of men has the right to override. Were we to admit to even the slightest degree a contrary right, we would undermine the foundations of the Republic.

"The Government is right in seeking to uphold its own laws and in asking its courts to aid it. These men have done an illegal act from which irreparable injury results to the complainant."

PITTSBURGH, Kan., Nov. 8.—"Regardless of the injunctions, prisons and Judges in the United States, I will not alter my stand, for I believe we are right," declared Alexander Howat, President of District 14, United Mine Workers of America, tonight when questioned as to what his attitude would be toward the court mandates issued in Indianapolis today.

President Howat left tonight for Indianapolis to meet Monday with other officials to decide on action. Mr. Howat said he expected the sessions to last until after midnight Tuesday and that, therefore, if any arrests are made officials in Indianapolis will make them.

NEW RAILROAD BILL WON'T BAR STRIKES

House Committee Drops That Provision of the Senate Measure.

METHOD FOR LABOR APPEAL

Employers, Employes, and the Public to be Represented on Tribunal.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8, (Associated Press.)—Finally refusing to include an anti-strike provision in its program of permanent railroad legislation, the House Interstate Commerce Committee completed tonight the bill which will be presented for consideration in the House beginning Tuesday. Representative Mondell, the Republican leader, said tonight that the passage of the bill by next week was planned. By that time, he said, he hoped the treaty situation in the Senate would be such as to permit the adjournment of the special session of Congress. Night sessions of the House would be held next week, if necessary, to pass the bill, he added.

The committee worked all day on the labor provisions. Various forms of anti-strike legislation, including a provison carrying fine and imprisonment for strikers, were voted down, none of the proposals receiving more than a half dozen votes. A minority report on this or other provisions on which the committee failed to agree unanimously is not expected, but the disagreeing committeemen said they would carry the fight into the House.

The Committee bill differs radically from the Senate Committee proposals. No provision is made for creation of a Transportation Board, which under the Senate measure would advise the Interstate Commerce Commission on railroad matters. The House bill centres about increasing the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the rail carriers, although proposals for giving the commission control of water carriers and telegraph and telephone companies were rejected.

Voluntary arbitration through boards similar to those created during the war was agreed on by the committee as the basis of the labor section. The only penalties provided are assessment of damages against a railroad for a lockout of employes in violation of a contract, or against a union authorizing a strike that would violate a contract. Under the provisions the carrier would be liable to double the damages suffered by an employe from loss of employment, and the union would be liable for the full damages suffered by a carrier because of breach of an employment contract.

Damages would be collectible by court action, and any judgment against a union would be limited to its common property, not including insurance, pension, or other benefit funds.

The bill would set up two boards for adjusting disputes, with headquarters in Chicago. The Railway Labor Adjustment Board would be composed of twenty union appointees and twenty representatives of the railroad executives and function through a "Conference Committee" chosen from the general membership of the board, to represent each union directly interested in the dispute, and an equal number of employer members.

Failure by the Adjustment Board to agree would refer the dispute automatically to the Railway Board of Labor Appeals, composed of nine members appointed by the President, with equal representation being given employes, employers, and the public. Decisions by this board on appealed cases, however, would be made by the labor and employer representatives, concurrence of five of the six members being required.

Rates initiated by the Railroad Administration during Government control would be continued "until otherwise

PRESSMEN YIELD, STRIKE NEARS END

1,680 of the 2,300 Members in Seceding Local 51 Obtain International Cards.

MANY SHOPS TO RESUME

Publishers Expect to See Most of the Compositors Back at Work Tomorrow.

The end of the tieup in the printing industry which has existed in New York City for six weeks is now practically in sight as a result of the return of more than two-thirds of the pressmen to the international union. On Friday night the members of Pressmen's Union 51 voted to return to the international as a body, but yesterday the men took the matter into their own hands without waiting for the outcome of a conference between their committee and George L. Berry, President of the international body, and swarmed down to the Sun Building, where nine men were kept busy exhanging the old union cards for new ones. At the end of the day Mr. Berry announced that 1,680 of the 2,300 men in the old union were now in good standing, and that the office would be kept open all of today to enable all of the men to join.

While the backbone of the strike is apparently broken and the employers announce that all the big presses in the city will be in operation tomorrow, the situation is complicated by the stand of Franklin Union No. 23, comprising the feeders, and Paper Handlers and Sheet Straighseners' Union No. 1, both of which bodies have voted almost unanimously to stand by their original demands for the forty-four-hour week and a $14 increase in the weekly wage. The paper handlers made their decision on Friday afternoon, but the feeders made theirs at Webster Hall in East Eleventh Street yesterday morning, even after the action of the pressmen was known.

At this meeting members of Typographical Union No. 6 said that the course of their union would be determined by the decision of the feeders. Big Six will meet this afternoon at the Lexington Theatre, Fifty-first Street and Lexington Avenue. While President Leon H. Rouse has declared that he would stand with James J. Bagley of the Feeders' Union on the present issues, the employers assert that the return of the pressmen has removed the only excuse for the "vacations" of the compositors and that they expect to see most of them back at work tomorrow morning.

Says Money Was Offered.

At both the meeting in Webster Hall yesterday and at an interview later in the day, Bagley repeated the charge he made Friday night, that a member of one of the largest publishing firms in the city had offered him $50,000 to urge his men to return to the International Union. Bagley made no secret of the man's name or of the name of the "second highest man in Tammany Hall" who arranged the conference. He said that on last Monday he received a telephone message asking him to come up to a certain room in a building in the neighborhood of Grand Central Station. He named the building and gave the number of the room. He said he took several other men with him, but they were not allowed in the conference.

In this room he said he was offered half of the money that the Vice President's company would save during the month of November if Bagley's men went back to work, and was told that the matter might be handled in such a way that he would appear a martyr in the eyes of his men. Bagley said he refused the offer. It was stated officially by the Printers' League last night that it knew of no such offer and would not stand for any such deal. The member

UNION MUST ACT BY TUESDAY

Judge Anderson Rules Walkout Is a Defiance of Fuel Control Act.

SAYS IT NEARS REBELLION

Holds Union Attorneys to Lever Act and Refuses to Hear Talk of Right of Workers to Quit.

COMPLIANCE IS EXPECTED

Counsel for Miners Says Lewis Will Obey Mandate, but Cannot Speak for Other Leaders.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—The officials of the United Mine Workers of America were ordered to recall before 6 o'clock Tuesday afternoon the strike order under which more than 400,000 bituminous coal miners quit work on Nov. 1 in a mandatory injunction granted in the Federal Court this afternoon by Judge A. B. Anderson, after a hearing in which the union attorneys sought in vain to argue on the right of workers to strike.

Violation of the wartime Federal Food and Fuel Control act, as charged by the Government, was affirmed by Judge Anderson, who said that the strike was not only illegal, but that under the circumstances it approached rebellion.

"I assume that they are law-abiding gentlemen and will obey," said the Judge. If they don't the Court will make them do it. The counsel for the Government has well said that there cannot be an 'imperium in imperio' in this country."

Attorneys for the unions announced that Acting President Lewis and Secretary-Treasurer Green intend to obey the mandate, but that they could not speak for the other officials. Later in the afternoon union headquarters called a meeting here for Monday of the Executive Board, district Presidents and Central Competitive Field Scale Committee to decide on their line of action.

Lewis Refuses to Speak.

"Not a word," was President Lewis's response to a request for an opinion. Other leaders of the miners took the same attitude, but Henry Warrum, chief of counsel for the union, let it be known that the case would be taken as promptly as possible to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago. He said, however, that it would be physically impossible to file this appeal before the injunction takes effect on Tuesday.

C. B. Ames, Assistant Attorney General, smiled when asked for comment, and said:

"The decision speaks for itself."

Attorneys for the miners fought a losing fight from the start of the proceedings. First they moved postponement for a week, indicating that there was a chance for settlement of the strike by that time, but Mr. Ames objected to postponement and the court ordered the case to proceed. Then the Government introduced five affidavits as evidence that the operation of the railroads was being interfered with and that contracts between employers and miners had been broken. The defense responded with its motion for dissolution of the restraining order and arguments followed.

Although allowed an hour and a half Judge Ames took only thirty-five minutes in presenting the Government's case. He based his argument on President Wilson's denunciation of the strike and on the charge that the structure of the Government was endangered by the alleged violation of the Lever food and fuel control law.

From that point the proceedings were hurried by Judge Anderson, who gave the attorneys for the defense little opportunity to go into legal points which they tried to get into the record. He upheld in every particular the contentions of the Government that the strike was illegal under the Lever Food and Fuel act, and said that the upholding of this act was the only question before the court.

At one stage he indicated that the right to strike was not applicable to the case because none of the defendants to the proceedings was earning his living by working as a miner, but he allowed the argument to proceed on the theory that the union officials were proper agents of the miners, carrying out orders given by their principals.

"This case," he said in issuing the injunction, "involves solely the question of enforcing the law. It is my absolute duty to uphold the law, which no one man and no body of men has the right to override. Were we to admit to even the slightest degree a contrary right, we would undermine the foundations of the Republic.

"The Government is right in seeking to uphold its own laws and in asking its courts to aid it. These men have done an illegal act from which irreparable injury results to the complainant."

Text of Mandatory Injunction.

The mandatory injunction, which was drafted by Charles B. Ames, special assistant to Attorney General Palmer, who came to Indianapolis to present the Government's case at the hearing, follows:

It is further ordered that the above-

Italian Troops Clash With d'Annunzio's Men; Two Are Reported Killed in Battle in Fiume

FIUME, Nov. 8, (Associated Press.)—Disorders between d'Annunzio's troops and Italian regulars have been reported, but details are withheld. According to the report, a street fight occurred with regular troops on their way to Susak with supplies for regulars stationed there.

By permission of d'Annunzio they were allowed to pass through Fiume. A quarrel started on the road and guns were used. The report says two men were killed and one was wounded. This reference is made in a published account of the visit of the Duchess of Aosta here:

"The Duchess visited the military hospital, where she prayed before the body of Private Luigi Sivero, who died in the incident along the line of the Fiume frontier."

D'Annunzio, in a statement made public by his press bureau, proposes that Italy decline to restore order in the Fiume situation. He says:

"The way out is wide, clear, direct. It is the same for us who entered the city Sept. 12.

"I realize that the Italian Government persists in its erroneous judgment and increases it by accepting from the Supreme Council a mandate to restore order in Fiume, held by me.

"I propose that the Italian Government send back the Fiume problem to the Peace Conference by returning the mandate, which it will be impossible to execute without shedding fraternal blood and without the danger of civil war throughout the nation.

"When the mandate is returned, the Government of Fiume claims the honor of remaining solely responsible for its attitude before the conference and before the world."

mentioned defendants, and each of them, be, and they are hereby, further enjoined from permitting the strike order issued on or about Oct. 15, 1919, to the miners and mine workers in the bituminous coal fields of the United States, to take effect on midnight of Oct. 31, 1919, to longer remain in effect, commanding them to issue a withdrawal and cancellation of said strike order and communicate the same to district or local unions, committees, and members of said International Union, Mine Workers of America, as fully and completely as the said strike order had been heretofore distributed and circulated to the said organization, its members, district or local unions, or any committee thereof, and the said defendants are allowed until 6 o'clock P. M. on the 11th day of November, 1919, within which to withdraw and cancel said strike order and notify the membership, committees, local and district unions of the said International Union, United Mine Workers of America, of the withdrawal and cancellation thereof, said notice of withdrawal and cancellation to be submitted to the Court for his approval within seventy-two hours from the date and hour first above named.

This temporary injunction shall take effect forthwith as to the defendants herein above named and as to all other defendants or persons when they are served with a copy thereof or when notice thereof has come to their attention.

The order signed by the Court also grants a temporary injunction.

While the mandatory injunction issued today is directed against the officials, and not the individual miners, the Court said that "even two miners who work with their hands can't conspire to quit work and limit production," and there was some informal discussion of a supplemental restraining order directed against the individual miners in the event the action of the court today, directed against the leaders, should not prove effective.

Crowd Jams Courtroom.

Half an hour before court opened the corridors of the Federal Building were jammed with scores of men and women waiting for an opportunity to get seats at the hearing. Deputy United States Marshals formed the spectators into lines and ushered them into the courtroom in single file. When the seats were filled, the doors were locked, but several scores of persons remained in the corridor hoping some of the persons in the room would grow weary of the proceedings and give them a chance to enter.

The defendants were slow in gathering. President Lewis and Secretary Green of the union were early but the others straggled in. Not all the men who were served with the restraining order were in court, counsel entering an appearance for them. The proceedings opened promptly at 10 A. M.

"Your Honor," said Henry Warrum of counsel for the defense, "the defendants wish to move at this time for a postponement of these proceedings for a week or ten days. In the meantime it is hoped that a peaceful settlement of the controversy upon which these proceedings are based may be reached."

"The questions involved are too important to admit of delay," rejoined C. B. Ames, Assistant Attorney General. "For this reason the Government objects to delay."

The attorneys then agreed that in ruling upon the motion for dissolution of the restraining order the court might also rule on the question of issuing an injunction as prayed in the petition filed last week by the Government.

Mr. Ames then offered affidavits from [illegible] of the Railroad Administration at Washington showing [illegible] and diminishing financial returns through operation of the roads.

"Taken together, these affidavits show," said Mr. Ames, "that the Government is operating the roads now at a loss which will increase with diminution of supplies for operation."

Counsel for the defense tried to object to the reading, but Judge Anderson halted them.

"These are equity proceedings and I am going to let the evidence in," said the court.

Judge Ames then read an affidavit from Thomas I. Lewis, Secretary of the New River Coal Association of West Virginia. This document detailed the alleged violation of union contracts in that field. Similar affidavits were offered, detailing alleged similar conditions in Eastern Kentucky and Tennessee.

Mr. Ames then related the re-establishments of certain Fuel Administration orders.

"I believe these are all the facts we wish to present at this time," said Mr. Ames.

Ask to Dissolve Injunction.

The defense thereupon started to read its motion to dissolve in the form of an affidavit.

The document asserted the legality of the strike call and that the sole object was to better the living conditions of the miners by increased wages and shorter working hours. This was explained as designed to combat the Government assertion of a conspiracy to violate the Lever Food and Fuel Control act.

The affidavit cited the statute forbidding issuance of injunctions in labor disputes unless based upon destruction of property of the complainant. The Lever act, it was argued, had become ineffective because the war had "ceased progressively," two of the circumstances cited in this connection being that soldier members of the union had been discharged from Government service and that the coal mines had been returned to their owners.

"The union members, therefore believed that peace had come and that the United States was no longer at war," said the affidavit, and it offered to show in court that by acts of the Federal Administration the war powers relating to the fuel industry had been dissolved.

The motion also argued that the restraining order was calculated to destroy the righ to strike and result in dissolution of the organization. It also asserted that the portion of the order restraining use of union funds confiscated property without due process of law.

This closed the evidence, and Judge Anderson then agreed with the attorneys that an hour and a half be allowed each side for argument.

Ames Presents Government's Case.

Mr. Ames opened for the Government. Reading from the Congressional Record, he got into the case President Wilson's statement on the coal strike, reading it in full. President Lewis of the union, with thumbs thrust into the armholes of his waistcoat, listened with a nonchalant manner, emphasized by closed eyes and an occasional use of a pencil as a toothpick.

"The President states fact in that statement to the American people," said Mr. Ames. "Because of a disagreement between the miners and operators of the central competitive field a strike has been ordered throughout the United States. And this, too, notwithstanding that in other fields there were in force contracts which were negotiated independently of the central field.

"It is not for the defendants to decide what is the law in this case. In civilized countries such questions are left to the arbitrament of courts.

"The courts of this land have decided that the war is yet existent. The unions say it has ended. They thus oppose their employers, the courts, and the Government.

"It is assumed by the Government, however, that the defendants acted in good faith, believing that their course was legal. Therefore the civil, rather than the criminal process, has been invoked as a matter of fairness and common justice.

"As the President of the United States has said, the time has come for plain speaking. No organization may override the law. Otherwise there is successful revolution. And I do not believe the American people have reached the stage where such a course can be approved.

"The Government contends that this strike is illegal, in that it violates the Federal Fuel Control act."

Mr. Ames cited the provisions of the law forbidding restriction of fuel output and concluded:

"Any arrangement which has that effect violates the law."

He said the Government's position in court in this case was settled by the Debs decision, and when Judge Anderson said he knew of that decision, the point was not elaborated.

Replying to the defense contention that the war had "ceased progressively," Mr. Ames quoted the Lever act provision that it would remain in force until peace was officially proclaimed, which he said has not been done.

Contends Lever Act Is in Force.

He also argued that President Wilson's statement as to war conditions of the strike, the declaration of Congress last week that the Lever act was still in effect, and court decisions that was still exists, showed executive, legislative and judicial opinion united against the union's contention.

He denied that the Clayton act had any application to the present case. He said the provisions on strikes did not permit an unlawful act, and that Section 20 of the act did not apply because this was not a case between employers and employes.

"But even if it did," he continued, "there is irreparable injury to this plaintiff as evidenced by the affidavits offered here today.

"We pray at this time for a mandatory injunction for withdrawal of the strike order because, notwithstanding the restraining order's effect, the strikers are still on strike.

"The situation is in a state of rest, if you please, which in itself works injury. The state of rest can be changed to a state of action only by cancellation of the illegal strike action.

"We feel," said Mr. Ames in concluding, "that there is nothing comparable with the importance of ascertaining whether the law of the country is supreme. When we reach the point where the supremacy of the law is challenged by any man or body of men we have reached the point where the decay of the Republic has set in."

Mr. Warrum started with a flat statement that every decision in the country relating to strikes had averred the right of workmen to strike when unaccompanied by boycott or disorder. He read opinions to this effect, but Judge Anderson asked:

"How do these apply to this case, when there is not a single defendant in this court who works with his hands?"

The attorney said the injunction against the officers or agents of the miners was, in effect, an injunction against the miners. On this theory he was allowed to continue his argument.

"These defendants are not interlopers," he said. "They are the duly constituted agents of the men, and the Government's bill of complaint itself shows that the men themselves ordered the strike and directed their officers to carry that order into effect.

"It is further important that in the bill appears the fact that these very defendants were parties to the Washington wage agreement and recognized then as lawful agents. But now the Government turns around and seeks to place in the position of interlopers these same agents when they carry out other orders of their principal."

Judge Holds Defense to Lever Act.

"That is not the question before the court at all," said Judge Anderson. "The Lever act makes it an unlawful conspiracy for two or more persons to arrange to limit production of coal. That is perfectly apparent to me. Everybody knows that. You may discuss that if you wish."

"But your Honor has just said you are convinced the conspiracy exists," exclaimed the attorney.

"Well, let's go on with the case as any other case," said the Court.

"Certainly," rejoined Mr. Warrum.

"Judge Evans has held that the war powers of the Lever act have expired and—"

"But I do not agree with Judge Evans," said Judge Anderson. "Congress had the right to say and did say that the Lever act should remain in force until a definite thing was done. That has not been done. So I hold that the Lever act is still in force."

"I hold also that stopping work in coal mines restricts the production of fuel.

"I am going to hold that even two miners who work with their hands may not legally conspire to stop production of coal."

The Court also upheld the assertion of the Government that the Clayton act did not apply to this case.

The discussion swung to the operators' attitude, and the Judge remarked they were not in court, that he had only one side to the controversy before him.

"But bring them in," he said. "I will be willing to enjoin their illegal acts also."

Then war condition of the Lever act and the status of men in service came up, leading Mr. Warrum to say:

"This is a case in equity, not a court-martial."

"I don't understand that remark," said Judge Anderson.

Further attempts to bring in the right of employes to quit work singly or in a body met with equal obstruction from the court.

"When Congress passed the Lever bill it made unlawful any conspiracy tending to decrease coal production. That is the law and that ends it."

Mr. Warrum sat down and Judge Anderson started a discussion of the Debs railroad case. He pointed out that the Supreme Court of the United States held the Government had the right to get an injunction preventing a railroad tie-up.

"Now," he said, "the Government controls the railroads and is using them to transport troops and mails. Can you assert that any one has the right to stop the roads in these circumstances?"

"I assert," said Mr. Warrum, "the right to strike for higher wages and to stop the roads if that result is an incident."

"You are wrong," said the Court.

"I'm through," said Mr. Warrum.

William V. Rooker then tried vainly to discuss the Lever act, but the Judge cut him short by holding formally that the act remains in force.

"Can I discuss the allegation of irreparable injury?" asked Mr. Rooker.

"Don't waste your time," said Judge Anderson. "I am going to hold that irreparable injury does exist in this case. Why, millions of dollars are being lost. What is the use in discussing this question on the Lever bill?"

Mr. Rooker agreed there was little. He then tried to show a difference between this case and the Debs case.

"I suggest you turn to the mandate that this strike order be rescinded," said Judge Anderson. "I am going to issue that unless you persuade me otherwise."

Mr. Rooker agreed there was nothing more to be said.

Judge Grants Injunction.

"I have thought about the case since the injunction was asked for," said Judge Anderson, "and I have read the Debs case two or three times. I am perfectly familiar with this law about strikes, and what the courts have said repeatedly about having the right to go on a strike and to quit work, but that is all beside the case, and the Government's counsel have stated in court and out of court that they are not seeking to do anything in contravention to any of these well settled questions.

"This is a different kind of a case, so far as this court is concerned. I think myself that this is not a justifiable question as to when this war ends. I don't think the court has got a right to say that. It is a political question and the legislative branch of the Government has recognized that in this very act, by providing that this shall terminate when the President makes the proclamation which is the technical legal ending of the war, or the evidence that the war has come to an end.

"I think the Lever act is constitutional. I think that it is in force. I have made up my mind to that plainly—no doubt about it. I think clearly that it prohibits the very thing that these defendants are doing and makes it unlawful.

"I think the Government is right in going to its own courts and in a peaceable, orderly method asking to have its rights vindicated. I think that the Clayton act does not apply at all; that the Lever act so far as this particular case is concerned if it did apply, supersedes it; that this restraining order ought to be made a temporary injunction, and that there ought to be added to it a direct order to these people to cancel that strike order, and if you have not already drawn one, you may draw an order of that kind.

"The Government is supreme even to the labor unions."

Just before signing the order requiring the leaders to recall the strike, Judge Anderson said of the strike:

"I think it's about the most lawless thing in this country. If the strike conspiracy to reduce the coal output could be carried out, it would be rebellion."

He asked Henry Warrum how soon the order recalling the strike could be carried out. Mr. Warrum said he did not know.

"Consult your clients," ordered the Judge.

Then Mr. Warrum and other attorneys for the defendants, and John L. Lewis acting President, William Green, Secretary Treasurer of the United Mine Workers left the court room for a consultation. They returned and Mr. Warrum said the defendants could hardly get the strike recall notice printed in less than two days. The Judge said it could be done sooner than that. If necessary it could be printed on Sunday, he said.

The court signed the temporary injunction pendente lite, and after the union attorneys gave notice of appeal, court was adjourned.

CUMBERLAND OUTPUT GROWS.

Arrangements Made to Assure Coal Supply to Essential Industries.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Nov. 8.—The local district officials of the United Mine Workers show no concern over the Federal Court order to Acting President Lewis to withdraw the strike order by Tuesday. Secretary Treasurer William J. Trickett, elected to the Maryland House of Delegates on the Republican ticket last Tuesday, said this evening:

"President Lewis has not the authority to rescind the strike order without reconvening the international convention. In promulgating the strike order he simply carried out the orders of the international body. Under these circumstances should he attempt to withdraw the order the men would not be obliged to obey, and I don't think they would."

District Organiser Fred D. Thomas said that he had advices that there were 8,000 men not belonging to a union on strike in the Uniontown (Penn.) field, about sixty miles north of this city. They are employed in a coke-producing section. He said the men who remained at work there were producing coal to be turned into coke only, and if an attempt was made to ship coal without making it into coke they would strike.

Fred Hare of the Baltimore & Ohio police force, took a score of workmen to Meyersdale today and quartered them at the Colonial Hotel. It was stated that they were to guard railroad property, and more particularly to protect the two large viaducts of the Western Maryland Railway at Salisbury Junction and Keystone Junction. Several members of the State Constabulary have also been assigned to Meyersdale territory. While all the mines in that region are idle, there has been no disorder.

Loading of coal from the mines along the Cumberland Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and its branches has been increasing daily all this week, the Somerset region is sending out from 600 to 725 loads a day, the Fairmont field twenty-five to thirty, the Morgantown & Kingwood Railroad field twenty-five to thirty loads a day, and the mines along the Preston Railroad from ten to twelve loads.

Arrangements have been completed whereby all essential industries in Cumberland may get coal on making application to the railroads which were making deliveries before the strike.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is sending about 300 empty coal cars a day to the mines of the Somerset region. Other sections are well supplied.

SEES STRIKERS FIRM.

Would Not Obey Lewis's Order to Work, Says Trickett.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Nov. 8. — If Acting President Lewis of the United Mine Workers should rescind the strike order the men would not have to obey, is the belief of William J. Trickett, Secretary-Treasurer of District Union 16.

"And I don't think they would," he said tonight.

READY TO TREAT WITH MINERS

Southwestern Operators Defer Action Pending Federal Settlement.

Special to The New York Times.

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 8.—The Southwestern coal operators are ready to enter into negotiations with the miners to reopen the mines in Kansas and Missouri, and arrange a new wage scale and working agreements unless the Government and general labor leaders succeed in their efforts to settle the coal strike in the next few days.

F. W. Lukins, President of the Southwestern Coal Operators' Association, and W. L. A. Johnson, field labor representative, had a conference with Governor Allen today. No decision was reached, and no action taken, because of the possibilities of a settlement being reached at Indianapolis and Washington in the next day or two.

"Mr. Lukins said today that if there were not developments of importance in the next day or two that the coal operators will present to me within a few days their proposition," said Governor Allen. "They will show what they propose to offer the miners for immediate resumption of work and their proposals to negotiate. They will also furnish me with whatever evidence I may require to demonstrate their good faith in opening negotiations. Then this will be presented to Alexander Howat, President of the Kansas district, for such action as he may taken toward presenting the proposal to the miners."

KANSAS CITY ALARMED.

Coal Shortage Reaches an Acute Stage—800 Cars Distributed.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 8.—The coal situation in Kansas City rapidly is approaching an alarming state, according to W. M. Corbett, General Manager of the Kansas City Terminal Railway Company.

According to Mr. Corbett, the company had about nine hundred cars of coal in the control of the Federal Coal Committee. More than eight hundred cars of this were distributed yesterday to those most in need of it.

TO OBEY NATIONAL LEADERS.

Birmingham, Ala., District Awaits Instructions on Court Order.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 8.—At the district offices of the United Mine Workers of America here it was said tonight that no action would be taken by the local officials to comply with the Federal order to call off the miners' strike, pending advices from international headquarters at Indianapolis, and that whatever instructions came from headquarters would be obeyed.

President J. R. Kennamer of District 20, received a telegram from International President John L. Lewis late today advising the Birmingham official that the mandatory writ of injunction requires consideration by members of the International Executive Board of Mine Workers, the Scale Committee of the Central Competitive Field, District Presidents, and other representatives, and that a meeting will be held in Indianapolis at 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. Kennamer announced following receipt of the telegram that he and International Organizer George Hargrove would leave tomorrow for Indianapolis to attend the meeting.

International Organizer William J. Harrison stated tonight that he doubted very seriously if the men would return to work, even though the strike order be recalled.

"They will realize," said Mr. Harrison, "that the recall was made under compulsion, and therefore are not likely to return to work."

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Nov. 8.—C. F. Keeney, President of District No. 17, United Mine Workers, when told of the Court's action today in Indianapolis, refused comment, but said it was not his intention "to fight the Government."

MURRAY SILENT ON ORDER.

President of District 5 Won't Talk on Injunction.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Nov. 8.—Philip Murray, President of District 5, United Mine Workers of America, was asked tonight what expression he had to make on the order of Judge Anderson of the United States District Court at Indianapolis, ordering the officials of the miners union to cancel the bituminous coal strike order, and answer why "cause" have not statement whatever to make.

One coal operator seemed to voice the sentiments of the rest when he said, "We have not worried much about the outcome of this matter, as we felt that the Government was on our side."

ORDER A SHOCK TO MINERS.

Springfield, Ill., Workers Doubt Lewis Will Heed Court Mandate.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 8.—The news that Judge Anderson had issued an order that the officials of the miners' union must recall the strike order was received here with consternation by the miners. Few of them had expected that the Government would take such drastic action.

Frank Farrington, State President of the union, is in Indianapolis, and Harry Fishwick, Vice President of the union, refused flatly to talk. President Farrington before leaving for Indianapolis yesterday declared that Lewis had no power to call off the strike.

Miners openly expressed doubt whether the men would obey Lewis if he ordered them to return to work. They predicted Lewis would refuse to obey the mandate of the court. Judge Anderson was roundly denounced.

JERSEY CITY SHORT OF COAL.

Mayor Orders Health Officer to Ask Railroads for Relief.

James J. Hagen, Health Officer of Jersey City, was instructed yesterday by Mayor Hague to see the heads of railroads and "urge that every possible effort be made to bring to this city a supply of coal sufficient to meet our real needs."

The Mayor fears a coal shortage if the miners' strike continues.

Jersey City coal dealers say their supplies are short because the Railroad Administration used anthracite coal cars to transport soft coal when the strike became imminent. They depend on filling their orders from supplies coming in and without further supplies all would be out of coal in a week or two, some probably in three days.

OWNERS READY TO NEGOTIATE

But Brewster Says Coal Miners Must Return to Work First.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 8.—The mine owners will reopen negotiations with the strikers as soon as the men return to work and continue working pending final settlement of differences, Thomas T. Brewster, Chairman of the coal operators' Scale Committee, announced tonight.

Mr. Brewster said he expected production of bituminous coal to be resumed shortly, as he "assumed" the court order issued today at Indianapolis would be complied with.

SEAL UP BURNING MINE.

Strikers Volunteer to Fight Fire in Largest Bituminous Working.

BICKNELL, Ind., Nov. 8.—American No. 1, said to be the largest bituminous coal mine in the world, which was discovered on fire last night, has been completely sealed today, after workmen had toiled frantically all night. Because of the size of the mine and the valuable machinery it contained, the fire is said to be most disastrous. The mine is entirely electrically equipped, not a mule being used.

Ordinarily 856 men are employed, and the mine has a capacity of 6,000 tons of coal daily. Only 24 men, including a pumper and engineers, were working when the fire was discovered, and they were rescued.

The cause of the fire had not been determined today. The shaft probably will have to remain sealed from two weeks to two months. Although the employes are on strike, more than 100 gathered when the alarm was sounded and volunteered to fight the fire, as evidence, they said, that they had no connection with it.

NEW RAILROAD BILL WON'T BAN STRIKES

changed by or pursuant to authority of law." And the bill increases the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission from nine to eleven members. And salaries of members from $10,000 to $12,000 a year. Among new duties of the commission would be supervision of all new capital issues of carriers, control of all improvements, authority over pooling agreements and terminal facilities, and supervision of the division of joint rates.

To provide capital for the carriers following the return of the lines to private control, the bill directs that the Government continue payment of the standard return or rental for six months, extending payments to short-line railroads that have not been under Government operation.

Government loans within one year after the return also are authorized, on approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission of security tendered, at 6 per cent. interest, and to mature in five years. Debts incurred during Government control would be refunded during a period of ten years, meanwhile bearing interest at 6 per cent.

FOSTER CHEERED AT GARDEN MEETING

Hundreds of Police Inside and Outside When Strike Leader Speaks.

STRIKERS GET $550,000

Leader Says Armed Men Drove Him from Johnstown—Red Literature Sold—Soviets Cheered.

William Z. Foster, Secretary of the Steel Strike Committee, told an audience in Madison Square Garden last night that he was forced by the police and a vigilance committee, "with guns in their hands," to leave Johnstown, Penn., Friday night. He spoke at a mass meeting for the benefit of the steel strikers held under the auspices of various labor organizations of this city. There were about 2,000 on the main floor. Edward J. Hannah, President of the Central Federated Union, was Chairman.

The police were on hand in force, there being about 700 with night sticks on all sides of the Garden. In addition others were held in reserve in the 69th Regiment Armory.

Foster was cheered many times and when he described his treatment at Johnstown there were boos and cries of "Shame!" A great cheer met his announcement that 20,000 men were out in that city. He said newspapermen met him at the station and warned him not to go into the city. When he was again warned that his presence would mean bloodshed he said he replied that it would not be the blood of the workers, for they did not even have picket lines out. He went to a hotel and conferred with some of the labor leaders. When he came out there were, he said, fifty armed men waiting to escort him back to the railroad station. When the crowd cried "Shame!" Foster paused and, lifting up his hand, said:

"There is no cause for alarm. I am talking of Johnstown and not of the United States."

After calling the Pennsylvania State Constabulary Cossacks, Foster made this complaint:

"If the man who was railroaded out of Johnstown had been an employer, troops would be in Johnstown tonight and all the members of that Vigilance Committee would have been on their way to the penitentiary. While we are assembled here our organizers are being deported out of Johnstown. They have been informed that if they did not go willingly they would be carried out on stretchers."

Foster said that the steel strike was progressing satisfactorily. "Despite what the lying press says, the strike is effective," he asserted. "There are 325,000 men on strike, and they will stay on strike until Gary comes across."

Charles Ervin, editor of The New York Call, said methods were being resorted to in Pennsylvania, that would bring shame to the late Czar of Russia. Organized greed controlled all the elected officials, from the Governor to the constable, and the black Cossacks had ridden down men and women in the steel trust towns. There was only one thing that would win the steel strike, there was only one thing that would win any strike, and that was the organized power of the working class.

Two $10 contributions to the strike fund, which totaled about $550,000, were from the Boston Policemen's Union and a "Bolshevik." Joseph G. Cannon, of the United Mine Workers' Union, who was calling for the subscriptions, brought forth great applause when he announced the names of these contributors.

A resolution was adopted calling for the defeat of the bill in Congress providing for the deportation of aliens who had been interned during the war.

Mr. Hannah announced that a meeting would be held in the Garden tonight to urge the lifting of the Russian blockade. Literature telling of the Bolsheviki and Soviet Russia was sold at the entrance to the Garden and in the auditorium itself, while references to the Russian revolution were cheered repeatedly. Some of the speakers referred to one another as "Comrade" and used the same word in addressing the meeting.

Cannon said the strike fund would be used in feeding the strikers' families and in "Americanising Congress," the newspapers, and Judge Gary, the Chairman of the United States Steel Corporation.

Some of those who contributed to the fund were:

International Ladies' Garment Workers, $250,000; Workers Mutual Aid Association, $100; Judge Jacob Pauken, $100; Actors' Equity Association, $250; Waist Makers, $200; Intercollegiate Socialist Society, $500; Marine Affiliation, $50; Franklin Union 23, $85; Striking Millinery Workers, $50.

JOHNSTOWN JAILS TWO AND EXPELS TWO MORE

Government Asks the Arrest of Two Who Had Been Organizing Strikers.

Special to The New York Times.

JOHNSTOWN, Penn., Nov. 8.—Johnstown streets were clear of labor agitators and organizers tonight, for the first time in eighteen months. Two are still in the city, but they are in jail, held for the Government, which requested their arrest.

T. J. Conboy, head of the local Strike Committee and A. F. of L. organizer, left this afternoon two hours before the time limit set for his departure by the Citizens Committee, headed by the Secretary of the local Y. M. C. A. His departure followed closely on the heels of that of minor officials of the Steel Strikers' Committee, and less than twenty-four hours after W. Z. Foster, Secretary of the committee, had been invited to save town two minutes after he arrived to "stir up the men."

Dominic Gliotte, organizer for the United Mine Workers of America, who is in charge of the local district in which there are several thousand miners, and Frank Kurkowski of the Federation of Labor, who organized the foreign-born workers of Johnstown and the Monongahela Valley for the steel strike, are the men in jail. Kurkowski, who is a Lithuanian, was picked up on the streets by local police. Gliotte was taken from an interurban car. The Government has not made public the charges against the men.

FARMER OPPOSES A. F. L.

Campbell Tells Gompers He Will Oppose Sending Delegates.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Milo D. Campbell of Coldwater, Mich., Chairman of the National Board of Farm Organizations, and President of the National Milk Producers' Association, today sent a letter to Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, in which he expresses the opinion that the organizations which he represents should decline to send delegates to the conference of organized labor to be held in Washington, D. C., Dec. 13.

The farmers' organizations were invited by President Gompers to send representatives to the Labor Conference.

Mr. Campbell declares himself in favor of the principles of the open shop and criticises organized labor for permitting radicals to participate in the management of its affairs.

TAKES 100 TONS OF FOOD.

Manager Goes to Open Vondado-Vanderbilt Hotel in Porto Rico.

Walton H. Marshall, manager of the Vanderbilt Hotel, sailed yesterday for Porto Rico on the Brazos, taking with him 100 tons of food for the new Vondado-Vanderbilt Hotel, which is to open next week. Owing to the longshoremen's strike, no ships have been leaving this port for a month, and Mr. Marshall took the precaution to make the opening of the hotel possible.

Before sailing, Mr. Marshall said the commerce between Porto Rico and the United States, together with the new interest of tourists from all over the world had made a first class hotel there desirable.

LABOR CHIEFS SURPRISED

was said, has now developed to the point where in order to avoid the accumulation of other freight at tid water points and in order also to avoid accumulation of loaded coal cars, it has been decided to permit the bunkering of vessels under foreign flags on permit, coal to be issued by the Coal Committee at the several tidewater points. Permits will only be issued for the supplying of such ships as is to take them to the next bunkering station.

The decision, it is felt, will make a great change in the situation and permit something approaching a resumption of normal ocean traffic.

QUICK DEPORTATION FOR RAIDED REDS

Sixty-five Men and Women Caught in Radical Headquarters Taken to Ellis Island.

SOVIET RALLIES BROKEN UP

Federal Agents Begin Work on Literature Seized—Sample Manifesto Given Out.

Thirty-three men, most of them with bandaged heads, black eyes, or other marks of rough handling, and two women who had been arrested with the men in raids on radical headquarters in various parts of the city on Friday night, were taken to Ellis Island yesterday, where an effort will be made to deport them as anarchists and revolutionists.

About 150 other men, who had been arrested by agents of the Department of Justice and members of the police anarchist squad in the raid on the Russian People's House, were set free. Most of them also had blackened eyes and lacerated scalps as souvenirs of the new attitude of aggressiveness which has been assumed by the Federal agents against Reds and suspected Reds. Twelve of the men who were roughly handled and later released said they were soldiers. The others said they were teaching or attending classes at the People's House, where automobile repairing and the English language and other subjects were being taught.

After ordering the thirty-three men and two women sent to Ellis Island, Federal agents under Director William J. Flynn of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, began work on the seized literature which was piled up in the Park Row Building in the offices of the Department of Justice. Most of the printed literature was in the Russian language, and will be a big job of translating before the Federal authorities will know the value of their evidence.

Raid Followed Weeks of Work.

Director William J. Flynn, who was in charge of the raids, refused to discuss them yesterday, saying that all information on the subject must come from Washington. Superintendent George F. Lamb of the New York Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice said the work of preparing for the raids and getting evidence against the persons to be arrested had covered weeks, and that the order to make the raids on Friday night had come from Washington.

The seizure of Red literature and records was expected to reveal proclamations in the Russian and other languages calling on radicals to observe the anniversary with a "general strike" or to rise against the Government. The Federal agents refused to say whether they had discovered anything yet of a violent character.

Seventy-five policemen patrolled Rutgers Square, which was to have been the scene of the disloyal rally today, but no meeting was attempted. Groups collected to see what might take place, but even these were broken up at word from the police to scatter.

The thirty-five alleged Reds who were sent to Ellis Island from this city last night were joined there by thirty of the same type who had been arrested in the northern district of New Jersey in raids directed by Federal Agent Frank R. Stone of Newark. The entire sixty-five will be taken before a Federal Commissioner on Monday. Isaac Schoor, a lawyer, representing some of the arrested men, said he would attempt to free them all through habeas corpus proceedings.

The star prisoner was said to be Naum Stepauch, General Secretary and organizer of the Federation of Russian Workers. The two women were Dora Lipkin and Esther Bernstein. Other prisoners regarded as important are Marcus Oradowski, Treasurer of the Federation of Russian Workers; Peter Blanki, who is under indictment for criminal anarchy; Alexander Chernoff, Arthur Katjes, and John Vermanuk. Prisoners were taken in Brooklyn, Maspeth, L. I., and the Bronx, as well as in Manhattan.

Several of the prisoners told agents of the Department of Justice that they would be delighted if the Government would only deport them at once. They will probably be held in this country for some time, even if the courts order their deportation. Superintendent Lamb of the New York Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice said there was no way to send the men back to Bolshevist Russia, and that to send them to the anti-Bolshevist region in Southern Russia would be consigning them to execution by a firing squad, which the Government has so far refused to contemplate.

A Sample Manifesto.

The following manifesto of the Federation of Russian Workers, which was seized on Friday night, was made public yesterday

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF THE FEDERATION.

Society at present is divided into two opposing classes; on the one hand the workers who have no chance, and the peasants who create all the wealth of the world with their toil; and on the other hand the rich, who take all the wealth into their hands.

Many times the class who have had no chances have risen against the rich parasites and their faithful servants and defendants, the Governments, in order to effect the complete liberation of the class from the yoke of capital and power, but each time they suffered defeat, because, not realizing their ultimate aims and the means for attaining them, they became merely weapons in the hands of their enemies.

The struggle between these classes continues at the present time, and will cease only when the toiling masses organized as a class recognize their true aims and by means of a socialistic revolution by force gain control of all the wealth of the world.

Having brought about such a change and having destroyed all governmental authority and institutions, the class that has no chance should proclaim a society of free producers working to satisfy the needs of every individual person, giving in their turn all their toil and their knowledge to society.

In order to attain our goal, we place in our plan, first of all, the necessity of creating a broad class-revolutionary organization of toilers which, carrying on a struggle directly with all institutions of capital and power, must train the working class to initiative and self-dependent activity in all of their undertakings, thus developing in them a realization of the necessity and inevitability of a universal strike-social revolution.

Therefore, organizing ourselves as a Union of Russian Workers, we, as part of the toilers of the world, will strive in all our future work to make the principles laid down in the foundation of the federation always our line of guidance, also in the work of organizing large masses of Russian emigrants for the earlier liberation of Russia and all mankind.

COVENANT OF COMRADES OF UNIONS OF RUSSIAN WORKERS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA UNITING THEMSELVES IN A FEDERATION.

Aims of the Federation.

(1.) The union of all organizations of Russian Workers in the United States and Canada for joint struggle with capital and power.

(2.) To support the movement for liberation in Russia.

(3.) The support of revolutionary steps taken by the workers of America.

(4.) Moral and material support of the organ of the federation, Nabat. (The Tocsin.)

(5.) The creation of organizations where there are none, and the support of all those already in existence.

The American Committee of Siberian Agricultural Co-operative Unions, which has a headquarters here, made public yesterday a copy of an alleged official order captured from the Bolsheviki in Russia, directing Bolshevist agents and sympathizers to encourage general strikes in all countries, produce uprisings, assassinate or compromise influential men and carry on an inflammatory propaganda calculated to incite international wars.

were carrying. Prisoners were taken in droves, the dangerous Reds to be divided later from the innocent bystanders.

While most of the raids were downtown, the police were active in Harlem small printing shops, from which inflammatory proclamations and weekly propaganda papers have been issued.

Plans for Revolution Confessed.

Senator Lusk, Chairman of the legislative committee investigating seditious activities, issued a statement last night in which he said that it was shown by the confession of leaders of the new Communist Party before the committee that they were aiming at the overthrow of the United States Government by revolution.

"It is the plain statement of the intention of the members of this organization to overthrow our established Government by force and unlawful means," said Senator Lusk. "The seventy-one local Communist organizations in New York City consisted of bodies of men and women openly and notoriously organized for the sole purpose of destroying our Government. They profess to believe and contend that the time has come when the Government is not strong enough to project itself.

"These organizations are a direct public challenge to the authorities of the State and nation. A passive attitude on the part of the Government toward the disloyal agitators organizing its citizens against it has resulted in a constant growth of the movement, as has been clearly shown by the investigation made by this committee. It seems to me that the time has come to put into force stern measures to do away with this agitation and punish these disloyal leaders in the movement. The city and State officials are engaged in an effort to enforce the laws of the State.

The committee considers that the result of this effort will be very helpful in preparing recommendations for action on the part of the Legislature, and regards it as a legitimate part of its work to do everything that it can to assist in this matter. It is perfectly willing to accept the onus of anything which may happen through its activity in an effort to protect our Government and citizens.

"It has been the policy of certain individuals and publications to furnish aid and assistance to the enemies of our country by criticising any efforts made by public officials to enforce the laws against sedition and protect our institutions.

"The time has come for the people of this country to take a definite stand on this question in order that we may know who our enemies are and deal with them as they deserve."

Russian Model Followed.

The Lusk Committee made public last night an account of the proceedings before Magistrate McAdoo, which said:

Mr. Stevenson testified that on Nov. 1, 1919, Morris S. Nessam, who was held a prisoner at Police Headquarters charged with criminal anarchy, gave him certain information which supplemented information already in possession of the Lusk Committee. As a result of this information, there was obtained an accurate list of all the Communist headquarters in this city. It was further shown that Dr. Maximilian Cohen, one of the Red leaders in this city and editor of the Communist World had stated to agents of the Lusk Committee that the purpose of the Communist Party and of all the persons associated and affiliated therewith and who subscribed to its doctrines was the overthrow of the organized Government of the United States and the State of New York and the substitution therefor of a dictatorship of the proletariat.

He also stated that it was the purpose of the Communist party to expropriate all land and property without compensation to the present owners, and that they proposed to accomplish this overthrow by stimulated mass strikes,' and that they did not propose to bring about any changes by the use of the ballot. Dr. Maximilian Cohen further stated that it was the purpose of the Communist organization as well as of all persons who are members of it, to use as much force as was necessary to accomplish the purpose and overcome the resistance of the present organized Governments of the State of New York and of the United States, and that if in accomplishing such purpose there was any bloodshed, the onus would be upon you, meaning the legal representatives of the organized Government of the State of New York and of the United States.

It was also shown that the purpose of this organization and its object are clearly set forth in its manifesto, program and constitution. The program of the party states, 'Its aim is to direct this struggle (the class struggle) to the conquest of political power, the overthrow of capitalism and the destruction of the bourgeoisie State.' To make clear its purpose the manifesto of this organization states: 'Communism does not propose to capture the bourgeoise Parliamentary State, but to conquer and destroy it. . . . It rejects the idea of class reconciliation and the parliamentary conquest of capitalism.

"Under the head of 'The Progress of the Party,' in the official manifesto and program appears the following: '(b) Participation in parliamentary campaigns, which in the general struggle of the proletariat is of secondary importance, is for the purpose of revolutionary propaganda only.'"

Hundreds of prisoners were landed at Police Headquarters in patrol wagons and automobiles of all descriptions. They were herded into the gymnasium, trial room, and all corners of the building, while the men considered to be the more important catches were questioned, generally through interpreters. One of the prisoners was a white-bearded man of 70 years. Several were carrying canes with musical instruments, protesting that they were merely taking them as an their subscriptions when they had been arrested. One woman prisoner was taken to Police Headquarters by a plainclothes man.

The largest crowd of prisoners captured was taken at one of the Ukrainian branches at 222 East Fifth Street. The prisoners from this place, which had been raided some time previously, numbered 150. Thirty-five men were taken in a raid in East Broadway, near Rutgers Square, where the Communists were to have made their demonstration yesterday.

Several of the places raided were found locked and uninhabited, but membership books, records, and printed literature were carried away. Social functions were in progress at some of the resorts raided. A package party and dance was interrupted by the raiders at the Communist branch headquarters, 1,709 Pitkin Avenue, Brownsville, and thirty-eight merrymaking youths were arrested. The girls were detained for a time and then released.

The questioning of prisoners at Police Headquarters was done by counsel for the Lusk Committee, Major Archibald E. Stevenson, Frederick W. Rich, and Deputy Attorney General Berger. Scores of men judged to be innocent were turned loose with little delay. Some of them said that they had been attending benefits and parties with wives and children at the Communist halls when they had been arrested.

When Jim Larkin was questioned, he said that he claimed the protection of his Government the Irish Republic. He was detained nevertheless.

WILL DEPORT REDS AS ALIEN PLOTTERS

Palmer's Blow Friday Hit Leaders of Russian Society, Worse Than Bolsheviki.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The arrest of more than 200 Russian Bolsheviki in various cities of the country last night ended the first phase of a campaign which the Department of Justice is waging to rid the United States of alien radical agitators who are urging the overthrow by violence of the Government. Other arrests, which will involve alien agitators of other nationalities, will soon be made.

"This is the first big step," it was stated in Attorney General Palmer's office this morning, "to rid the country of these foreign trouble makers."

It was pointed out that all the persons arrested, with the exception of some in New York City, had been investigated and the record of their activities in this country gone over in the Department of Justice before orders were issued for their arrest. In cases involving aliens the department will ask for deportation warrants.

In every instance in which an arrest was ordered the instructions to William J. Flynn, Director of the Department of Justice Bureau, came from the Attorney General.

It is stated in the Department of Justice that the Government is determined to rid the country of these foreign disloyalists, and the campaign will continue until this undesirable element is eliminated.

Every person whose arrest was ordered last night is a member of the Union of Russian Workers, the organization which held a convention in Youngstown last Summer and voted in favor of a campaign of confiscation of private property and substitution of soviet control of industry in this country. This convention, at the instance of Jacob Margolis, the I. W. W. lawyer of Pittsburgh, voted an indorsement of the steel strike.

The activities of this organization in the United States was disclosed by the Department of Justice today.

"More than 200 Russian Reds," the statement reads, "one of them with all the materials for making a bomb in his possession, were taken into custody last night by agents of the Department of Justice in a raid that covered more than fifteen of the largest industrial centres of this country.

"Raiders captured a complete counterfeiting plant at Newark, N. J. This included plates, presses, and bank notes ready for circulation. Reds' flags, guns, revolvers, and thousands of pieces of literature were also taken by the Department of Justice agents.

"The Reds taken into custody were all leaders of the Union of Russian Workers. This organization has more than 7,000 members throughout the country, and has been engaged in active propaganda against the present form of Government for many months. It has many locals scattered throughout the country. Last night's raids included leaders of the organization in New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo, Akron and Youngstown, Ohio; Trenton, Newark and Elizabeth, N. J.; Hartford, Waterbury, Ansonia, Bridgeport, New Haven and Seymour, Conn.

"Romen Mosichok, organizer of the Union at Trenton, N. J., had in his material for making bombs in his room at 109 Pemberton Street.

"These articles included gunpowder, copper and brass wire, electric batteries, and wax paper, etc. Mosichok, when taken into custody, admitted that he had been member of the organization since December, 1915.

"The counterfeiting plant at Newark was found to be an elaborate affair. It was found in the rooms of two active members of the union. A large supply of counterfeit banknotes was on hand. These men will have to face additional charges.

"Agents of the department and of the Bureau of Immigration have been collecting evidence against them for two months. All of the prisoners are aliens, and the evidence collected will be presented to the Commissioner of immigration and their deportation asked for.

"The Union of Russian Workers was organized in New York in 1907 by eleven men, led by one William Szatow, at present a resident of Petrograd. The purpose was to amalgamate all of the Russian groups in the United States into one organization.

"With the aid of newspaper and other propaganda, the membership of the Union of Russian Workers began to grow until at the present time it consists of sixty locals, located in the principal cities of the country, with a membership of 7,000.

"The most important convention of the Union was held in Detroit in 1914, with delegates from all of the principal cities in the United States and Canada present. The delegates to this convention adopted resolutions which have become a part of the constitution of the federation and which has not been substantially changed since that time. The dues books of the members of this organization contain the following preamble to the constitution of the organization, which well reveals the purposes of the Union of Russian Workers:

"'The present society is divided into two opposing classes—the downtrodden workers and peasants on the one side, producing by their work all the riches of the world, the rich people on the other side, who have grabbed all the riches into their hands.

"'Many a time the class of the oppressed stood up against the rich parasites and their faithful servant and protector, the Government—to conquer its full liberation from the yoke of capitalism and political power, but every time it suffered defeat, not being fully conscious of its own final goal and means, by which victory can be accomplished, thus remaining only a weapon in the hands of its enemies.

"'The struggle between these two classes is being fought also at the present time and will end only when the toiling masses, organized as a class, will understand their true interests, and will make themselves masters of all the riches of this world by means of a violent social revolution.

"'Having accomplished such a change and having annihilated at the same time all the institutions of the present State, the class of the disowned must establish the Society of Free Producers, aiming at satisfying the needs of every individual person who, on its side, is giving to the society its labor and its knowledge.

"'For the attainment of these aims we consider as of the primal importance the necessity of building up a wide revolutionary organization of toilers which, by conducting a direct struggle with all the institutions of capital and government, must train the working class to initiative and an independent action in all its acts, thus educating in it the consciousness of the absolute necessity of a general strike—of the social revolution.'

"The Union of Russian Workers believes more in mass action, including armed action in time of great national strife. Its principles do not favor the Bolshevist form of Government, but they are willing to accept the support of any radical or group of men as an expedient for furthering their own particular needs. And while not supporting the Bolshevist move in this country openly, they are secretly supporting it in order that they may through it achieve their ends."

Francis P. Garvan, Assistant Attorney General, stated tonight that all the leaders of the union were now in custody. The number arrested who are to be held, he added, was 211, distributed as follows: Newark, N. J., 31; Baltimore, Md., 10; Akron, Ohio, 6; Monessen, Penn., 2; Bentleyville, Penn., 1; Universal, Penn., 1; Cleveland, 17; Buffalo, 14; Philadelphia, 9; Trenton, N. J., 1; Hartford, Conn., 33; New York City, 33; Chicago, 7; Detroit, 40.

It was said today that nine radicals had also been taken into custody in Washington. Mr. Garvan declined to say anything regarding this report.

A Federal official was asked if Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, who styles himself Bolshevist representative in this country, had been arrested. He replied that, as yet, Martens had not been arrested. He made the same reply regarding Santori Nuorteva, Martens's chief assistant in the "Bolshevist embassy" in New York City.

The locals of the union, it was pointed out, were organized to spread the doctrines of the union among Russian immigrants, and propaganda was conducted by means of literature, newspapers and lectures. Lecturers were sent out by the Executive Committee to all parts of the country. Funds of the organization were derived from dues, lectures and concerts and the sale of radical literature.

Among the literature captured in the raid were:

1. "The Future Society," by John Gray, issued by the Union of Newark, and dealing with anarchistic doctrines.

2. "Program of the Anarchist Communists," a book issued by the New York branch of the Union of Russian Workers in 1919, dealing with the overthrow of Government by force.

3. "God and the Government," by Michael Bakunin, issued by the New York branch of the union in 1918. Bakunin is a leading Russian anarchist.

4. "The History and Structure of the I. W. W.," by Vincent St. John, published by the I. W. W.

5. "Revolutionary Industrialism," by Grover Perry, published by the I. W. W.

Following the suppression of "Golos Truda" by the Post Office Department, the official organ of the organization became the Khleb i Nolya (Bread and Freedom), which appeared first on Feb. 28, 1919. This is barred from the mail in Canada and the United States, due to its anarchistic teachings. It is issued from the headquarters of the union, 133 East Fifteenth Street, New York City. The sheet of eight pages has a wide circulation among members of the union. An extract from the issue of Aug. 28 shows the nature of the articles:

"Complete destruction of private control of natural resources and capital, complete destruction of power to rule and the institutions invested with powers to enforce rule of one man over another, those are the outstanding features of social revolution."

The union supports the Russian I. W. W. paper Golos Truzenko, and the Soviet publication Robotshi i Krestyanian, (Workman and Peasant.)

An article in the union's organ, entitled "Thoughts on Social Revolution," says:

"Only social revolution can free the worker and only the working class can put over a social revolution. There are no legal means nor can there be any whereby true liberty could be obtained, for the laws are the products of those that form and defend the existing order of things.

"By the words 'social revolution' we mean a complete destruction of the present order and not merely the transfer of Government power into the hands of social democrats—in other words, not with a view of intrusting the political minority with the power, we came out to destroy, a dream cherished by the social Jacobins. You cannot call a set of returns, whatever they are, a revolution; you cannot apply this term to a play at parliamentary combinations."

The issue of Sept. 17, under the title "In Passing," says:

"Murder is always murder, and the man who kills is always a murderer. . . . Not only he who has fired the shot or wielded the knife which kills is a murderer, but in equal measure, and often even more, those who send men subservient to them, (as for instance, in suppressing popular rebellions and in war,) to kill, are murderers, making use of blind instruments.

"The only service of this man has been in the fact that, being a professional of his craft, he came to be by a simple chance at the head of the American armies which fought in Europe, and there, obedient to the commands of those who had sent him, he, with ability and with no brains, led the work of murder of men by men, and for this they raise him to the skies and honor him in every way."

The issues of Sept. 25, under the heading of "Anarchist Syndicalism and Communism," contains the following:

"The contemporary professionalism (unionism) does not contain anything anarchistic, because it is partisan and utterly materialistic—anarchists joining professional unions are forced to renounce the social-political teachings of anarchism.

"France was among the first who showed the world how to get rid of priests and autocratic monarchs and to introduce, constitutionally, a democratic form of government.

"Anarchism is going still farther, saying that we are not only obliged to destroy the political mechanism as it may be, either monarchism, constitutionalism, republicanism, democracy or even socialism, but that it is our duty to destroy all these forms of government, as they are unworthy of human freedom."

The House Committee on Immigration may investigate the problem of deporting aliens during the coming recess. The inquiry, if authorized, will go into the activities of Frederic C. Howe, former Commissioner of Immigration in New York, who is charged with having been indifferent to the deportation of undesirables.

Representative Albert Johnson, Chairman of the committee, said today:

"The investigation will be a comprehensive attempt to find the defects in the present system, and as a result we hope to be able to recommend to Congress changes that will rid the country of these men whom the Department of Labor has not deported. Congress more than a year ago provided for the deportation of all aliens who advocated the overthrow of the Government by force, and, yet, few of these undesirables have been sent back to their native countries. Three thousand of these aliens are waiting, and we propose to determine the cause of the delay.

"Many of the radicals have been able to check the deportation warrants by writs of habeas corpus. The deportation machinery set up a special court for the work, largely in the Department of Labor, and it may be found advisable to have all the proceedings to the Department of Justice and have the deportation trials in the regular courts."

SEIZED LITERATURE URGES ASSASSINATION

185 Alleged Reds Were Taken in Chicago Raid—Say Papers Were Printed Here.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Assassination of public officials and destruction of public and private property were advocated in seized literature of the Union of Russian Workers, which union was made the object of Federal raids with hundreds of arrests last night and today. In Chicago 185 persons were questioned, but many were released and the actual number held was fifty.

Although fifteen deportation warrants have already been issued by the local immigration bureau, criminal prosecutions against some of those arrested have been planned. Criminal actions could be based on the charge that the union transported anarchistic literature by mail and express, according to Edward J. Brennan, Chief of the local Bureau of Investigation.

Three branches of the union had been organized in Chicago, it was learned. Steven Wasileveasky was the local secretary.

Wasileveasky and others were taken in a raid last night at a meeting of the Communist Labor Party, according to Mr. Brennan. Wasileveasky was declared to have been selling literature of the union at the time. The literature, it was said, was printed in the office of Bread and Freedom, official organ of the union, in New York.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—Two men were arrested here tonight by the police under instructions from agents of the Department of Justice in a raid on alleged headquarters of radicals. A wagonload of books, pamphlets, and leaflets was seized.

SEIZE 250 MORE IN DETROIT.

Department of Justice Agents Continue Their Raids.

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 8.—Continuing their raids on meeting places and homes of members of the Union of Russian Workers, Department of Justice agents tonight added approximately 250 alleged radical agitators to the fifty-two taken into custody last night and early today. Arthur L. Barkey, local chief of the Bureau of Investigation, declared tonight that he believed nearly all the leaders of the movement here had been arrested. He added:

"If the backbone of this movement isn't broken now, it will be before we have finished."

A score of operatives from other cities are here to assist the Detroit agents.

60 SEIZED AT BRIDGEPORT.

Alleged Radicals Rounded Up in Raid Last Night.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 8.—Sixty alleged radicals were arrested here tonight in raids by agents of the Department of Justice, aided by local police.

Most of the prisoners were taken in boarding houses on the east side, and were brought to City Court Chambers to be examined.

TAKE 40 IN PHILADELPHIA.

Four Women Are Held as Alleged Reds—To Deport Some.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—Forty alleged Reds, including four women, were arrested in the Federal raids here last night. Those marked for deportation are to be sent to Gloucester for a hearing before immigration officials. Todd Daniels, superintendent of the investigation here for the Department of Justice, would not comment on the raids, explaining that his lips were sealed by Washington.

Several of the men taken were employed in local shipyards and munitions factories. All day today their friends and relatives thronged into the Federal Building to their aid, but none of them would admit that they were in any way connected with the raided organization. Immigration officials asserted that eight of the men would be proved to be anarchists and undesirable aliens, and deported.

No connection between the local groups and the strikes called in the cities where they have locals has yet been established by the Government men.

SEVEN HELD AT AKRON.

100 Are Taken in Raid on Alleged Bolshevist Quarters.

Special to The New York Times.

AKRON, Ohio, Nov. 8.—Seven men are held in the county jail as the result of a raid on alleged Bolshevist quarters conducted by the Department of Justice and the Sheriff's office late last night and this morning.

The raid resulted in the detention of 100 men. Forty were examined and seven detained.

Quantities of Red literature, some of it printed in Russian, were seized, it is said.

ARREST ONE IN STAMFORD.

Russian Machinist and Trunk Full of Literature Are Held.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Nov. 8.—The police today arrested for the Department of Justice Samuel Barcowski, 26 years old, of 98 Ludlow Street, in connection with the roundup of alleged Reds. They seized a trunk full of literature printed in Russian, some of it bearing pictures of Trotzky.

Barcowski, who is single, came here six weeks ago from Derby, Conn. He is a machinist and worked in the Yale & Thorne plant here. His parents live in Russia. He was taken to the county jail in Bridgeport.

Arrest Six in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 8.—Six arrests of alleged Bolsheviki were made in Baltimore during last night by agents of the Department of Justice. The officers declined to give any information regarding the arrests, saying that it must come from Washington.

U-BOAT MISSED ORDERS; SANK 7 DUTCH SHIPS

Witness Tells German Committee This Severely Strained Relations with Holland.

BERLIN, Nov. 7, (Associated Press.)—The submarine war was discussed at today's session of the National Assembly's subcommission investigating into the war.

Captain von Bartenbach, explaining the difficulty of communicating by wireless with submarines away from their base, related how seven Dutch ships were sunk owing to a submarine being submerged and failing to get a message giving permission for the vessels to pass. This severely strained diplomatic relations with Holland, according to Captain von Bartenbach.

Colonel von Mers asserted that Germany was able to decipher all English messages sent after 1914.

Admiral von Koch criticised Admiral von Tirpitz for the interview the Minister of Marine had with an American newspaper correspondent (in December, 1914,) in which the submarine war was predicted.

BROOKLYN MEN IN ACCIDENT

Patrick McCauley Hurt When Auto Is Sideswiped by Another Car.

While passing through Kearney, N. J., on the Lincoln Highway about 6 o'clock last evening an automobile containing Milton Napier, President of the Tide-Water Building Company, and who lives in Brooklyn, sideswiped an automobile belonging to Patrick McCauley of 87 Huron Street, Brooklyn, which was going in the same direction. McCauley was thrown out and suffered fractured ribs and internal injuries. Mr. Napier ordered his chauffeur to place the injured man in his car and took him to the Jersey City Hospital.

After the injured man had been cared for Mr. Napier drove to a police station in Jersey City and reported the accident. He was told to return to Kearney and to report it there. This he did and his chauffeur, William Passwater, of 446 Pacific Street, Brooklyn, was held by the police pending a report of McCauley's injuries.

Mr. Napier with his wife and John Underwood of the Underwood Typewriter Company were returning from Philadelphia. Mr. Underwood was in another car and did not learn of the accident until he got to Brooklyn. He then returned to New Jersey and joined Mr. Napier.

BOLSHEVISM ABSENT IN ALSACE-LORRAINE

Workers Concentrate on Production and Have No Time for Politics.

UNEMPLOYMENT UNKNOWN

Volume of Business Closely Approaching Figures of 1913, with Industries in Full Blast.

STRASBOURG, Nov. 7. (Associated Press.)—Alsace-Lorraine is one spot in Europe which is not tainted by Bolshevism. Workers evince no ambition to become prominent statesmen or to lead Red Guards against the bourgeoisie, but express themselves as satisfied with their chosen lots.

Nowhere, in the many countries the correspondent has visited since the armistice was signed, have social and economic conditions resumed such a pre-war appearance. Chimneys above the iron ore smelters of Lorraine are smoking, and the miners descend daily into the pits of Alsace, whence comes coal, so badly needed elsewhere in Europe.

M. Laugar, President of the Strasbourg Municipal Council, told The Associated Press today that the volume of business done by various trades and industries of the city was closely approaching its 1913 figure, and that Strasbourg had no unemployment problem.

The very atmosphere of the city is one of cool, calm determination to go back to the settled social and economic conditions obtaining before the war. The city shows relief at being rid of German rule. The people appear satisfied to resume life on a normal basis under the free Government of France.

The rapidity with which the city resumed its normal business life on Wednesday, the day after the greatest fête in its history, when it welcomed Premier Clemenceau, is proof that it is not Strasbourg's business to enjoy itself, but to work.

TRAFFIC PROBLEM IN PARIS.

Inrush of Visitors and Refugees Causes Congestion and Accidents.

PARIS, Nov. 7. (Associated Press.)—Traffic squad policemen are seeking a remedy for the crowded condition of some of the streets, resulting in accidents and long delays at the principal intersections. It is estimated that more than 500,000 pedestrians and 8,000 vehicles daily pass the Place de l'Opéra, where several streets converge.

The influx of refugees and Peace Conference delegates and their assistants and the concentration of hundreds of extra automobiles sold by the army have combined to make the traffic problem acute. Relatively little traffic control is exercised by the police, and there have been many accidents recently.

Godfrey Tearle Arrives.

Godfrey Tearle, the English actor, son of the late Osmond Tearle, arrived yesterday from London on the Cunarder Carmania to appear in "Carnival," which will have its first performance in America in Washington on Dec. 14, under the direction of the Shuberts, and come later to New York. It was written by H. C. M. Harding and Matheson Lang.

Mr. Tearle said this was his first visit to his birthplace since he was 2 years old. During the war he served as a lieutenant in the 50th Battery of the Royal Field Artillery and was severely wounded. Mr. Tearle was accompanied by his wife, known on the stage as Miss Mary Malone.

THE "MANSILLA" CAPE-WRAP FOR WOMEN

PRESENTS A WRAP OF SPANISH INFLUENCE. COMBINING THE ROMANCE OF THE PAST WITH THE PRACTICALITY OF THE PRESENT—FOR ALL OCCASIONS OF MORNING, AFTERNOON AND AFTER-DARK

A Cape with a Spanish Past
A Wrap with a Paris Present
A Mode with an American Future

BY creating that absurd character of Spanish chivalry, Don Quixote a-tilting at windmills with his lance, the great writer Cervantes "smiled Spain's chivalry away" But though the customs of chivalry have faded, Spanish costumes remain with us still. Indeed, an observer of fashion today might fancy he had strayed into one of those Castles of Spain, renowned of song and story, for in dress and accessories of dress

The Trend is Toward the Spanish

High Spanish combs are again worn, and there are feather fans such as shielded somber Spanish eyes. Skirts, too, are picturesque as Spanish senoritas wore when Spanish cavaliers affected plumed hats. And due to the Parisienne's refusal to relinquish the vogue of the cape and the American woman's demand for a new variation of it, more striking still is the Spanish influence in wraps. The result is the "Mansilla" Cape-Wrap — chic, graceful, and feminine.

THE "Mansilla" Cape-Wrap combines all the requisites of an informal afternoon wrap with all the perquisites of a formal cape—and so deserves the romantic title of "Mansilla". It combines the picturesqueness of the swathing Spanish cape with the practicality of a coat—and so earns the name of Cape-Wrap. It may be worn straight, like a coat, or draped about the figure, according to individual fancy — no two times alike.

The Wrap Without Fur Trimming

is one of the features of these new models. Many women prefer to wear their own separate furs, and the "Mansilla", made of velvets, brocades or the new, soft, clinging, wool fabrics so fashionable this season, offers just this opportunity. This new Cape-Wrap may be had in all the favored colorings, which make it appropriate for both afternoon and evening wear; embroidered, or with large collars, cuffs, and bandings of fur if you like.

LLOYD GEORGE HINTS AT NEW RUSSIA PLAN

Hopes the Powers Will Be Able to Renew the Attempt for Peace Made Last Spring.

NO MORE INTERVENTION

Confident of a Just Adriatic Settlement—Allies Agreed on Ending Turkish Rule Over Other Races.

LONDON, Nov. 8. (Associated Press.)—Premier Lloyd George, speaking at the Lord Mayor's banquet tonight and referring to the Supreme Council's effort for Russian peace early this year, said: "I hope the time is not distant when the powers will be able to renew the attempt with better prospects of success."

The Premier recounted briefly the world's troubles, saying: "Apart from Russia, the outlook is good."

He spoke optimistically of the settlement of the Adriatic and Turkish questions, which, with Russia, he said, constituted the world's chief problems.

He recalled that exactly a year ago at the same board he announced the abdication of the German Emperor. He did not believe that the few well-informed then expected the ensuing year would bring such progress toward a settlement as had been made.

The Premier, taking up the most difficult questions left for settlement—the Adriatic, Turkey, and Russia—said:

"The Adriatic question has gathered about it a deep passion. But I am confident a settlement will be found compatible with the interests and honor of our gallant allies, on the other hand, and I am certain that justice will be done the nations emancipated from the Austrian yoke."

The Premier declared that there was complete agreement between the Allies that Turkish domination of the Greeks, Arabs, and Armenians should end and that the Black Sea should be free to all nations.

"The outlook in Russia is unpleasant," he continued. "A few weeks ago there was a promising prospect of an early issue, but today indications point to a more prolonged and sanguinary struggle. I do not believe that the Bolshevist armies are going to conquer the whole of Russia, but I dread an interminable series of swaying campaigns, devastating the country and the prosperity of the world.

"The Allies gave an opportunity to the Russian people to decide their form of Government, but unfortunately, no section was ready. We have given real proof of our sympathy for the men of Russia who helped the allied cause by sending one hundred million sterling worth of material, and support of every form.

He did not regret the cost, but asserted that England could not continue intervention in a dangerous civil war.

FALL BACK ON YAMBURG.

Anti-Red Army Suffers Severely in Retreat.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A statement issued by the War Office tonight, based on yesterday's reports from the Northwest Russian Army, confirms the Bolshevist capture of Gdov, forcing the Russians back to a line from the mouth of the River Tcherma to a point 15 miles south of Yamburg.

Bolshevist prisoners state they were ordered to capture Yamburg at all costs.

The Russian centre has retired 35 miles east of Yamburg.

Owing to the lack of means of transport several wounded traveled afoot, and some of them died from exhaustion on the way. Despite the disappointment caused by the retreat, the morale of the troops is excellent.

The Bolshevist pressure from both north and south is increasing hourly. The White Russian armored trains have worked courageously and incessantly, endeavoring to delay the Bolshevist advance from the north. Many soldiers who had been mobilized with the Bolsheviki appeared to be starving. They were without shoes and scantily clad, and came over and joined the Whites. On the other hand, the Communist sailors were well equipped.

A Bolshevist wireless communication from Moscow announces the occupation of Tchernigov, (on the River Desna, 80 miles northeast of Kiev.)

General Yudenitch informed The Associated Press correspondent that after the retreat his troops lacked food and munitions. The General, however, did not think the operations would be stopped owing to the cold weather, which he considered would affect the Bolsheviki more than his own troops. He said the foreigners attached to the White Army had fought splendidly.

REVAL, (undated.)—The Associated Press correspondent has returned here from Gatchina, having left that town on the last train out, the Bolshevist forces entering the following morning. The evacuation of Gatchina was carried out in perfect order, many refugees accompanying the troops, who left the town empty.

GERMANS ATTACKING LIBAU.

Bermondt Reported Driven from Suburbs of Riga.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A War Office communication says it is reported that a German attack against the northern defenses of Libau was repulsed because of the freezing of the lakes, but it was expected that the attempt would be renewed in greater strength. Fears are also entertained that the Germans will try to capture Windau.

North and west of Riga the Letts, under cover of a bombardment by the allied squadrons, advanced along the coast ten miles west of the mouth of the Dvina and have driven Bermondt's troops from the immediate suburbs of the city.

Revolt in Reds' South Army.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A wireless message from General Denikin states that the Chief of Staff of the Soviet Army near Britinsk (Briansk (?) 236 miles southwest of Moscow) organized an uprising of workmen occupied Britinsk, and overthrew the Soviet authorities. Thus, the statement says, the Red Army at the most important point on the front, lies between General Denikin's troops and the insurgent workmen.

KOLCHAK-JAPANESE ALLIANCE REPORTED

Archangel Newspaper Expresses Satisfaction Over a Supposed New Arrangement.

OFFICIALS DON'T KNOW OF IT

Omek Being Put in Readiness for Defense Against Attack of Advancing Bolsheviki.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A telegram to Reuter's Limited from Archangel expresses approval of the reported conclusion of an agreement with Japan. The newspaper Otetchestvo, (Fatherland,) says:

"It is no longer a question of the recognition or nonrecognition of Admiral Kolchak, but of an alliance of the All-Russian Government with a powerful neighbor. It is sufficient to describe it even in this way to understand its meaning and importance.

No direct information has, however, been received here regarding this reported special agreement, and both the British Foreign Office and the Japanese Embassy declared that they knew nothing of any such alliance or agreement.

The civil evacuation of the region between Ishim and Irtish, which it is expected will soon become the theatre of decisive battles against the Bolsheviki, has begun, according to advices received here from Omsk dated Nov. 1.

Omsk, as a military base, must soon be cleared of all useless elements and serve in the defense, according to the advices, but the Supreme Governor and the Government as represented by the Council of Ministers will remain.

BALTIC STATES TO MEET REDS

But They Ask Powers to Supervise Treaty if Peace Is Made.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Representatives of the Baltic States in conference have issued a long official statement explaining their attitude regarding their entry into negotiations with the Bolshevist Governments. This statement, which is made public through the Esthonian Legation here, representatives of these Governments point out that it is not their intention to intervene in the internal affairs of Russia.

The communique concludes with the statement that these Governments are prepared to enter upon pourparlers with Russia, but that in order to safeguard their future they earnestly request the great democratic States to supervise the fulfillment of the treaty should peace be concluded.

BERLIN, Nov. 7. (Associated Press.)—The International Military Mission to the Baltic States to supervise the evacuation of the German troops there, which arrived from Paris today, remains here for a number of conferences with the German Government before proceeding to the Baltic regions.

The length of its stay in Berlin has not yet been determined.

Kings County Republicans Will Hear Presidential Aspirants.

Men who are before the country as candidates for the Republican nomination for President have been invited to speak before the Kings County organization at its monthly meetings.

It was announced yesterday that Senator Miles Poindexter of Washington would address the meeting in December, Senator Hiram W. Johnson of California in January, Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio in February, and Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois in March.

The November meeting will be held Tuesday evening at Kismet Temple, on Schermerhorn Street. The successful republican candidates in Tuesday's election will attend and some of them will speak.

ASKS $20,000 FOR A KISS.

Woman, Suing, Is Joined by Husband, Who Wants $5,000.

A suit against George F. Egan, a railroad employe, to recover $20,000 damages sustained by being kissed has been filed in the Hudson County Circuit Court by Mrs. Mary A. Murphy, of Erie Street, near Pavonia Avenue, Jersey City. Mrs. Murphy's husband, Frank L. Murphy, joins with his wife in the suit and asks that $5,000 of the amount claimed shall be paid to him. Egan boarded with the Murphys on Oct. 26, the day of the alleged theft of the kiss.

Mrs. Murphy's petition says she was alone in her bedroom when Egan forced his way in, put his arms around her and kissed her. She was frightened and fainted and has been under a physician's care since then, she affirms.

Egan's answering affidavit says the story is wholly false.

PREMIER HOPES TO SEE LADY ASTOR ELECTED

Lloyd George Gives Cordial Approval to Her Candidacy, as Do Balfour and Fisher.

PLYMOUTH, Nov. 8, (Associated Press.)—Premier Lloyd George has sent the following message to Lady Astor:

"I am very glad to hear that you have been nominated to contest Plymouth as a Coalition Unionist. I hope the electors of Sutton Division will return you to Parliament by a large majority.

"Now that women have been enfranchised, I think it important that there should be a certain number of women in Parliament in order to represent the women's point of view. There are a good many questions regarding housing, child welfare, food, drink, and prices in which it would be of immense advantage both to the nation and to the House of Commons to have woman's point of view presented by a woman, and your sympathies were genuinely with the people long before you had any notion of becoming a candidate yourself, and even before woman suffrage became an accomplished fact.

"The study you have given these subjects for many years well qualifies you to speak about them. I further know the hard, devoted, and unselfish work you did during the war in behalf of the wounded, and how your house became a home for thousands of men stricken on the battlefield. I have seen many wounded passed through Cliveden Hospital, and know the feelings of gratitude and the affection they feel for the tenderness and cheer which you brought them.

"I therefore cordially recommend your candidature to the electors of Plymouth and trust they will return you at the head of the poll."

More messages of indorsement have been received by Lady Astor. One from A. J. Balfour, Lord President of the Council, says: "I earnestly trust that every voter sympathetic to our aims will unite in securing your triumphal election."

H. A. L. Fisher, Minister of Education, writes: "It will be glorious to welcome you to the House of Commons."

LINERS SAIL AFTER DELAY.

Lapland and Rochambeau Held Up by Port Strike.

The Lapland of the White Star Line and the Rochambeau of the French Line sailed yesterday for Southampton and Havre, after several days of delay due to the longshoremen's strike.

Among the 400 first cabin passengers on the Lapland was Dr. Wendell T. Bush of Columbia University, on his way to represent that institution at the opening of the new French University of Strasbourg, Nov. 22, the first anniversary of the entry of French troops into the city. Major Gen. Sir Anthony Bowlby and Major Gen. Sir Robert Jones, British surgeons who have been attending the International Conference at Atlantic City and in Canada, also sailed on the Lapland.

Among the passengers on the Rochambeau for Havre were Miss Lee Thurman and Miss C. T. Taussig, on their way to work with Miss Anne Morgan's committee for reconstruction in the devastated towns of France.

BULGARS ARREST EX-CHIEFS

Members of War Cabinet Seized—Ferdinand's Extradition Asked.

SOFIA, Nov. 7.—The Bulgarian Government confirms officially the news of the arrest on the night of Nov. 4 of the principal members of the Radoslavoff Cabinet who are still in Bulgaria.

The arrests include M. Toncheff, Minister of Finance during the war, and General Radko Petroff. In addition a number of members of the Bulgarian Sobranje belonging to the Radoslavoff party and three generals accused of inhuman methods of warfare were apprehended. The number of persons arrested was 200.

The Government has begun negotiations to obtain the extradition of ex-Czar Ferdinand, ex-Premier Radoslavoff and the former commander-in-chief of the Bulgarian armies, General Jekoff, who took refuge abroad after the collapse of Bulgaria in the war and the abdication of Ferdinand.

Premier Vassil Radoslavoff, at the head of the pro-German party in Bulgaria, came into office in 1913 and conducted the negotiations which led to the rejection of Entente requests that Bulgaria enter the war against the Central Powers or preserve neutrality and to a declaration of war against the Entente, in conformity with the terms of an alliance with the Central Powers.

His cabinet remained in office until June, 1918, falling when it was seen that the defeat of Bulgaria and the loss of the war were inevitable. Czar Ferdinand abdicated Oct. 3, 1918, resigning his crown to his eldest son, King Boris.

Gas Kills Baby, Overcomes Parents.

John Connery, the 1-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Connery of 1,133 Rogers Avenue, Brooklyn, is dead, and his parents are at the Kings County Hospital suffering from partial asphyxiation. The janitress heard moaning in their suffering from partial asphyxiation, fled the police. Patrolman George Harfst forced an entrance and found Mr. and Mrs. Connery unconscious and the baby dead. The parents are not expected to recover. A rubber tube leading to a gas heater had proved defective.

Girl Dies from Open Gas Jet.

Miss Marion Brady, 24 years old, of 626 Leonard Street, Brooklyn, employed in the auditing department of the Board of Education, was killed by illuminating gas early yesterday, when a draft in her bedroom blew out the flame of her gas jet. She was found by her sister, Miss Ida Brady, a school teacher.

ECLIPSE SHOWED GRAVITY VARIATION

Diversion of Light Rays Accepted as Affecting Newton's Principles.

HAILED AS EPOCHMAKING

British Scientist Calls the Discovery One of the Greatest of Human Achievements.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—What Sir Joseph Thomson, President of the Royal Society, declared was "one of the greatest—perhaps the greatest—of achievements in the history of human thought" was discussed at a joint meeting of the Royal Society and the Royal Astronomical Society in London yesterday, when the results of the British observations of the total solar eclipse of May 29 were made known.

There was a large attendance of astronomers and physicists, and it was generally accepted that the observations were decisive in verifying the prediction of Dr. Einstein, Professor of Physics in the University of Prague, that rays of light from stars, passing close to the sun on their way to the earth, would suffer twice the deflection for which the principles enunciated by Sir Isaac Newton accounted. But there was a difference of opinion as to whether science had to face merely a new and unexplained fact or to reckon with a theory that would completely revolutionize the accepted fundamentals of physics.

The discussion was opened by the Astronomer Royal, Sir Frank Dyson, who described the work of the expeditions sent respectively to Sobral, in Northern Brazil, and the Island of Principe, off the west coast of Africa. At each of these places, if the weather were propitious on the day of the eclipse, it would be possible to take during totality a set of photographs of the obscured sun and a number of bright stars which happened to be in its immediate vicinity.

The desired object was to ascertain whether the light from these stars as it passed by the sun came as directly toward the earth as if the sun were not there, or if there was a deflection due to its presence. And if the deflection did occur the stars would appear on the photographic plates at measurable distances from their theoretical positions. Sir Frank explained in detail the apparatus that had been employed, the corrections that had to be made for various disturbing factors, and the methods by which comparison between the theoretical and observed positions had been made. He convinced the meeting that the results were definite and conclusive, that deflection did take place, and that the measurements showed that the extent of deflection was in close accord with the theoretical degree predicted by Dr. Einstein, as opposed to half of that degree, the amount that would follow if the principles of Newton were correct.

Dr. Crommelin, one of the observers at Sobral, who spoke next, said that eight exposures of twenty-eight seconds each were made during the totality of the eclipse. Seven of these plates showed seven stars in each. One showed no stars, owing to the presence of a thin cloud, but gave well-defined images of the inner corona of the sun and of great prominence. Seven exposures of the same star field were made for comparison between July 14 and July 18 in the morning sky, the sun being then 45 degrees or more away from it. The results reduced to the sun's limb were 2.08 seconds and 1.94 seconds respectively. The combined result was 1.98 seconds, with a probable error of about 6 per cent. This was a strong confirmation of Einstein's theory, which gave a shift at the limb of 1.7 seconds. The evidence in favor of the gravitational bending of light was overwhelming, and there was a decidedly stronger case for the Einstein shift than for the Newtonian one.

Though the results were fairly conclusive, Dr. Crommelin said the question of the revision of Newton's law of gravitation was one of such fundamental importance that consideration was already being given to the next total eclipse in September, 1922, visible in the Maldive Islands and Australia.

Two of the consequences of Einstein's theory, he continued, namely, the motion of Mercury's perihelion and the bending of light by gravitation, might now be looked on as established, "at least with great probability." There was, however, a third predicted consequence, which was a shift of the lines in the spectrum toward the red in a strong gravitational field. The effect in the solar spectrum would amount to one-twentieth of the Angstrum unit, the same as that due to a motion of one-half kilometer per second away from the sun. Dr. St. John had looked for this effect without success. If this failure were taken as final it would mean that parts of Einstein's theory would need revision, but the parts already verified would remain.

The effects on practical astronomy, Dr. Crommelin said, of the verification of Einstein's theory were not very great. It was chiefly in the field of philosophic thought that the change would be felt. Space would no longer be looked on as extending indefinitely in all directions. Euclidian straight lines could not exist in Einstein's space. They would all be curved, and if they traveled far enough they would regain their starting point.

Sir Joseph Thomson, summing up the discussion, said:

"These are not isolated results that have been obtained. It is not the discovery of an outlying island, but of a whole continent of new scientific ideas of the greatest importance to some of the most fundamental questions connected with physics. It is the greatest discovery in connection with gravitation since Newton enunciated that principle."

OHIO DRYS NOW LEAD BY ONLY 381 VOTES

Official Count in Cuyahoga County Reduces Their Lead by 1,099 Votes.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 8.—After a day of depression for the opponents of prohibition, the receipt of official figures from Cuyahoga County, Cleveland, gave a new turn to affairs. The revised figures from that county, still to be verified are: For ratification, 48,051; against ratification, 52,199—a lead against national prohibition of 24,148.

The unofficial figures were: For ratification, 48,238; against ratification, 51,252—a wet majority of 3,049. This is a wet gain of 1,099, and cuts down the dry lead from 1,480 to 381.

The total wet gains on the official count in the other counties may be sufficient to overturn the present indicated result.

MEXICO'S ACCOUNTS $75,000,000 SHORT

Controller's Statement for 1918 Shows That Amount for Which There Are No Proper Vouchers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The discovery of a shortage of 151,514,476.89 pesos, or more than $75,000,000 at par in American money, in the office of the Controller of Mexico for the year of 1913 has caused a sensation, according to advices from Mexico City today. This department, which Thomas R. Lill, a member of the Bruère Commission from the United States, told the United States Senate Committee, investigating Mexican affairs, was the greatest achievement of the commission, has just made its report for the last calendar year, and under the head of funds unaccounted for lists this amount. According to the report the item covers disbursements for which no proper vouchers were obtainable.

Today's advices state that El Universal, a leading newspaper of Mexico City, declares that there is no record of the arrest of a single defaulting paymaster of the Government, or of one being compelled to turn over funds not his own to make good a shortage. It points out that a recent order of the Controller directed that all sums paid to the military should be accepted without investigation.

Excelsior, another leading paper of the Mexican capital, in an article entitled "The Death Dance of the Millions," calls attention to the silence of officials, and says that the lack of satisfactory statistics prevents gauging at all accurately "how deep the wounds are which the last ten years of revolutionary upheaval have caused on the public body." The account of the Federal expenses for 1918 shows, says this newspaper, "the magnitude of the disaster which no one today dares to call the redeeming and regenerative revolution, on which its most fervent adherents have now turned their backs and have begun to repudiate."

As to the accounts of 1917, this paper says, the disorder so far shown is even greater, and the reports will probably have to be simply pigeonholed and forgotten. It adds that in the face of the present disclosures the only remedy will be to suppress the Controller's office.

JUDGE HAND ADMITS DOUBT AS TO DRY ACT

Declares from Federal Bench That Validity of the Measure May Be Questioned.

GIVES VIEW OF ITS MEANING

Tells Attorneys in Hotel Case That Its Effect Seems to Extend Beyond Present Time.

In an argument before Judge Learned Hand in the Federal Court yesterday, in which the Wartime Prohibition law and the Volstead act were attacked as unconstitutional, Judge Hand admitted that there was a genuine doubt as to the validity of the act. It seemed clear to him, however, that the meaning of the act was that it should run beyond the present time, because the President has made no statement that the conclusion of the war may mean the conclusion of hostilities.

The case before him at the time was that of the Eastern Hotel Corporation of 54 Whitehall Street. Arrests were made in the hotel on charges of violation of the Volstead act, and the Government applied to the court for permission to have the place declared a "public nuisance." William H. Hirst, counsel for the hotel and for the New York State Brewers' Association, asked the Court to vacate the preliminary injunction, deny the permanent injunction, and that the Government's complaint be dismissed.

Mr. Hirst denied that there was a war emergency when the Wartime Prohibition act of Nov. 21, 1918, and the Volstead act of Oct. 28, were passed. Such legislation, he said, was unconstitutional, inasmuch as it took away property from persons contrary to law. It was a question, said Mr. Hirst, as to under what constitutional provision and right Congress claimed the power to enact or the executive branch of the Government the authority to enforce either act.

The power of Congress is not analogous to the so-called police power of the State, he asserted, exercised in the regulating and controlling of traffic.

The Federal Government, said Mr. Hirst, has no inherent or general police power, and the only exercise of such power the Federal Government ever claimed or has ever attempted was in making such laws and regulations as were necessary to enable it to carry out the powers specifically granted to it under Section 8 of Article 1, which gave it a power to levy taxes, raise and support armies, maintain a navy, and make rules for the Government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

Questions Enlarged Powers.

The actual state of war does not enlarge the constitutional power of Congress, maintained the attorney, and he added that even if Congress had a right to pass a bill prohibiting the liquor traffic it had no right to do so without compensation because no emergency or necessity existed for Congress to enact that kind of a bill.

"The existence of the war emergency or necessity," he continued, "is not something which may be determined by legislative declaration. The constitutional rights of the States and of the people of the United States do not depend on the declaration of any legislative body but exist as a matter of inalienable right in the actual circumstances of the cases that involve them."

After declaring that the property involved has been in use as a hotel for 100 years and that the Government had no right to confiscate it and brand it as a nuisance, Mr. Hirst said:

"The situation created in the United States by war prohibition is loaded with dynamite. Its ramifications are unfathomable. It presents the Government in an attempt to enforce an untenable statute. The hollow pretense that a situation exists with respect to the late war which calls for war prohibition is so transparent and so flagrantly insincere as to make the law an absurdity as well as an act of oppression. And in these exigent times the Republic cannot stand as the sponsor for such a proposition."

Judge Hand's Comment.

Everett V. Abott, of counsel for the Eastern Hotel Company, argued the confiscatory measure of the law, which has served to deprive the hotel of stocks of liquor in its possession. It was during the argument of George L. Donnelan, also of counsel for the hotel, that Judge Hand said:

"Of course, the act may be invalid. There is to my mind a very genuine doubt about that. The act may be invalid, but we are not discussing its invalidity. We are discussing its meaning. It seems to me quite clear that its meaning is that it shall run beyond the present time because the President has not made any statement that the conclusion of the war may mean the conclusion of hostilities."

Judge Hand asked counsel on both sides if either could furnish him with any authorities defining the war powers of Congress. Assistant United States Attorney Earl B. Barnes, who argued for the Government, said that there were none so far as his knowledge went. He declared, however, that war powers of Congress arose from the direct powers given to Congress to declare war. These powers, he said, also implied that Congress has the right to successfully prosecute to a final determination all the phases of the war.

Mr. Barnes cited, to sustain his argument, the action of Attorney General Palmer, who appeared before Congress on Friday to ask that the powers of the Food Administration be extended six months beyond the declaration of peace. At this point Judge Hand remarked: "Yes, but peace might not be declared until 1925."

The Government counsel put the question as to whether Congress would not have the right to legislate for the nation's safety any form of regulation tending to the public good, if, the war having been declared over and ended last July, there still existed the food crisis, the fuel crisis, the labor unrest, and other situations arising directly out of the war.

Decision was reserved in the case.

Hans Rieg, former chief of the Foreign Language Division of the United States Treasury in the Liberty Loan campaigns, in a statement issued yesterday through the Association Opposed to National Prohibition, said that a good deal of the Government's work with the foreigners who desired to return to Europe in large numbers was nullified when the foreigners learned of the prohibition situation.

William H. Anderson, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, in a statement issued yesterday, said that defeat in Ohio of the State enforcement law amounts to nothing in practical operation, for there will be another State enforcement law, and, in any event, the Federal Enforcement law will be "the supreme law of the land" in Ohio as everywhere else.

TO WORK FOR MT. HOLYOKE.

Alumnae Lay Plans for Raising a Fund of $3,000,000.

The Mount Holyoke Alumnae Association of New York met yesterday afternoon at the Central Club for Nurses, 132 East Forty-fifth Street, to outline plans for raising its quota of the fund of $5,000,000 which is the goal for the present campaign. Miss Ruth French Adams, Executive Secretary of the Endowment Fund, announced that efforts would be made to raise the money by direct subscription, rather than by fairs, theatre parties and teas, as has been the former custom.

Of the fund $2,000,000 is to go toward raising the salaries of the faculty to meet the high cost of living, and the remainder will be spent on a new biological building and a new residence hall for students. With another residence hall the college will be able to accommodate a much larger number of pupils, for there is already room for many more in the class rooms and study halls.

Miss Margaret McGill, head of the Intercollegiate Unit for Canteen Work, graduate of Mount Holyoke, class of '94, told of her experiences in England and France during her war work there.

O'MALLEY WINS SUIT.

Obtains Confirmation of $65,627 Judgment for Client.

James O'Malley, the Republican candidate for Surrogate, who was defeated in Tuesday's election, won a victory yesterday when the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court upheld a judgment for his client, Joseph P. Collins, now a representative of the United States Shipping Board in London, against the International High Speed Steel Company for $66,627.

Collins sued for commissions on steel sold for toolmaking. The defense interposed was that Collins was an apprentice and was entitled only to such commission as the defendant chose to give him. The Directors voted him only one-half of 1 per cent., although in all other cases except this sale he got the usual 10 per cent.

SCENE—New York TIME—The present

Fashions by Best & Co.

The curtain rises on a scene of superlative splendor, rainbow lights play on a fountain in the background, the tantalizing strains of a waltz are heard off-stage, a kaleidoscopic throng passes to and fro, the centre of the stage now held by a picturesque figure in 18th century gown of gorgeous brocade, now by a demure young person in airy tulle and April blossoms, now by a vivid personality in clinging chiffon weighted with jet, now by a radiant pair in emerald and coral velvet, white shoulders gleaming above collars of dusky fur.

AURORE—the figure descending the stairs wears an original Martial et Armand wrap inspired by the rose, and gold and gray of day-break. The gray chiffon velvet is threaded with dull gold, the lining duplicates the first rosy tinge of dawn. The collar is a cloud of dusky fur. 645.00

SIR THOMAS HERE, ANXIOUS FOR RACE

Tells of Plan to Bring New Shamrock Overseas for Trials with Challenger.

FAVORS SANDY HOOK COURSE

Hopes for Contest in June, as Winds Are Likely to be Better Than in the Fall.

Bronzed and weather beaten by sun and wind, Sir Thomas J. Lipton, Bart., arrived yesterday from England on the Cunarder Carmania buoyed up with the hope that the New York Yacht Club would accept his challenge and that the race would take place on June 24, 1920.

Sir Thomas has achieved every ambition of his boyhood dreams in his long and successful business career, and has only one wish to gratify, and that is to win what the popular Baronet terms "That Mug." He will remain in New York for two weeks to make arrangements for having the challenger Shamrock IV. taken from Shewan's shipyard in South Brooklyn to City Island and attend to other business matters.

"I have not received any reply to my challenge," Sir Thomas continued, "but there is plenty of time. It might have been cabled to England while I have been on the voyage across to New York. Nicholson's of Gosport, England, have been instructed to fit out the twenty-three metre Shamrock, which I had built for racing under English rules before the war, and I expect she will be ready to start across the Atlantic under her own rig by the end of March so as to be ready early in May to put the challenger Shamrock IV. through her paces off Sandy Hook before the time for the cup race comes in June.

"The 23-meter Shamrock has proved herself to be a very fast sailer in the English Channel, and by putting them together I shall be able to gain some idea of what the challenger can do. I prefer the Sandy Hook courses, because I have known those waters for twenty years, and like them, in spite of the fact that the Jersey mosquitoes have come off in swarms each time and nearly bitten me to pieces. So far I have not been able to find a steam yacht to take the place of the Erin, because the prices asked today are something fabulous and out of the question, but I expect to charter one suitable for the purpose next Spring.

"I have asked that the first race be sailed on June 24 next year, because I believe that we ought to get better breezes early in the Summer than in September—the month in which I contested for the cup before. Of course, the New York Yacht Club has the right to select the course, and I will cheerfully acquiesce in whatever the committee says, but I would certainly rather have the cup races sailed over the old Sandy Hook course than any other."

In regard to business conditions in England, he said that they would be better if the industries were freed from Government control.

"Butter is scarce and so is sugar," the Baronet continued, "but bacon which cost 20 cents a pound to the public before the war the people have to pay 55 cents a pound for today.

"There is plenty of bacon in England, but the reason for the high prices is that it is under control. The labor situation was much more satisfactory in England when I left than it had been for some time."

The cheery yachtsman was accompanied on the trip by a friend, Stanley Naylor; his secretary, John Westwood, who was with him on all previous trips, having been taken ill just before the Carmania sailed from Liverpool.

PUBLISHERS TO MEET.

Special Session Called to Discuss Print-Paper Situation.

A special meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association will be held in the Astor Ballroom, Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, Nov. 12, it was announced last night, for the purpose of considering the present acute newsprint paper situation and to take such action as may seem advisable. Every member is urged to attend.

The Pulp and Paper Manufacturers' Association will meet at the same time, and conditions may be favorable for a constructive program.

First Post-War Deal with Germany

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The first commercial transaction between the Governments of the United States and Germany since April 6, 1917, was made a few days ago when a bill for $64,800, covering cost of transporting prisoners of war to Germany, was presented in Berlin through diplomatic channels.

MRS. CLOSE WINS DIVORCE.

Custody of Two Children Allowed Daughter of Late C. W. Post.

Word was received in this city last night that a decree of divorce had been awarded on Friday in the Superior Court of Connecticut to Mrs. Edward B. Close, wife of the President of the Ponten cotton mills. Mrs. Close before her marriage was Miss Marjorie Post, daughter of the late Charles W. Post. She was said to have received more than $3,000,000 from her father's estate.

Mr. and Mrs. Close were married in New York City on Dec. 3, 1905. The grounds in the action just ended were not stated last night. The custody of two daughters was awarded to Mrs. Close, the children being permitted to visit their father part of each year. Mrs. Close may assume the name of Mrs. Merlweather Post Close.

In 1916 when the National Guard was mobilized and dispatched to Texas for service along the border, Mr. Close gave $50,000 to Dr. Samuel Lloyd of the Post-Graduate Hospital, to organize and equip a 500-bed base hospital for service in Texas. Mr. Close was designated to proceed with the unit as its quartermaster.

Mrs. Close has been best known as an art patron. Few sales of paintings or objects of art failed to find her among the bidders. In January, two years ago, she paid $10,100 for a Rubens, "Adoration of the Magi."

The Close home, Boulders, in the Rock Ridge section of Greenwich, Conn., was long a show place in that section. A year ago last May, however, Mrs. Close offered the $500,000 mansion to the directors of the Fairhope School, an institution for the education of poor boys and girls in national history and citizenship. The offer was accepted.

Benefit for Home for Aged.

The eighth Pilgrim Festival and Rainbow Fair for the benefit of the New York Congregational Home for the Aged will be held in the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church Parish House, at Tompkins Avenue and McDonough Street, Brooklyn, beginning Tuesday evening, Dec. 2, until the night of Dec. 4. Among the features will be an Arcade, a Wonder Shop, a Gypsy Village, a House of Lords, and a Country Store.

Sale on the Second Floor

The Vogue of the Evening Cap

is one of the most interesting style developments of the Autumn season.

The Millinery Salon displays many charming and distinctive examples of this novel feature—airy confections of gold or silver lace, or of net studded with paillettes or strewn with pearls; with perhaps an aigrette de paradis for the final touch of elegance.

Fur and Fur-trimmed Hats

upon which also Madame la Mode has set the cachet of her favor, are among other of the allurements of this attractive Salon; and could anything possibly be more irresistible than a piquant fur hat archly perched above a riante face?

And, above all, youth—not youthfulness, merely—is the attribute most lavishly expressed in the artistic creations displayed in this Department.

FRENCH NEED CREDIT FOR TEN-YEAR TERM

Baron du Marais, Vice President of Economic Mission, Tells of the Situation.

EXPECTS RAPID RECOVERY

Coal, Cotton, and Other Raw Materials from America Are Wanted Now.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The main object of the French Economic Mission now in this country is to make arrangements for long term credits from American financial interests to be applied in the purchase of necessary raw materials and other supplies required during the period of France's economic recovery from the effects of the war. This was made plain by Baron du Marais, Vice President of the French Economic Mission, in an interview with THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent in the course of the mission's visit to Washington.

Baron du Marais gave a more optimistic account of the industrial and financial condition of France than has been generally understood in the United States. In suggesting ten years as the period that would be required to liquidate credits obtained in America, he pointed out that France was sure that within ten years "the means available for repayment will be at hand."

Nobody, perhaps, is better qualified than Baron du Marais to speak of French needs and French ability to pay her way. He is the Director of the Credit Lyonnais, a position that corresponds to that of President or Chairman of the Board of Directors of the largest American financial institution. As Vice President of the French Economic Mission he is its principal financial advisor.

"France is financially fit," said Baron du Marais. "The basic elements of her economic solidity have been in no way imparied by the four years of war which she has successfully concluded. These basic elements are: The will to work of her people, the fertility of her soil, and the natural raw material resources which she possesses within her own borders and in her colonies. Further, though her industrial plants and establishments in the north are considerably damaged, and in some cases destroyed, owing to the war, in the undisturbed four-fifths of the country she is producing today in price volume a sum total equal to her entire production before the war.

"Owing to the war 4,500,000 acres of French land have been rendered unfit for immediate cultivation. The result is that in 1920 France will have to import about $150,000,000 worth of food. This condition is, of course, purely temporary, as prior to the war France produced 90 per cent. of the foodstuffs she consumed.

To Increase Food Output.

"The return of Alsace assures in France a large supply of chemical fertilizers. This will enable the farmers of France to increase their production so greatly that by 1921 her imports in foodstuffs will be small as compared to 1920, and by 1922 she will again be producing sufficient for her needs.

"There is no land labor problem in France. Farming is productive of considerable financial results, and as a great majority of the farmers own their own land and work it with their sons on the basis of co-operation the profit which accrues is equitably distributed to a very large number of people. When the farmhands were demobilized they returned to their farms and took up their work without hesitation and without loss of time.

"The French industrial situation presents a problem more varied and more difficult of solution than the agricultural, for on the quick solving of the industrial problem rests the rapid recovery of France from the effects of the late war. Industry in France cannot recover without the assurance of a supply of the necessary raw materials it demands. The most accessible source of supply for most of these raw materials is America, but it is uneconomic to buy in the most expensive market in the world, and the present rate of exchange makes the American market the most expensive in the world.

"Coal is the first item on the list of the needed raw materials for industry. Before the war France was already obliged to import largely. As 60 per cent. of her domestic coal supply was furnished from the northern regions, and as many of these productive mines have been rendered unfit for work for a number of years, France faces at present an annual shortge of 20,000,000 tons, which will be bought in the market offering the most advantageous terms.

"Besides increasing as rapidly as possible her own coal production, France is developing and has developed water power as the logical substitute for coal. Already her rivers and waterfalls are supplying her with 1,500,000 horse power, and she has at her disposal some 5,000,000 horse power as yet undeveloped. The introduction of modern coal-saving devices in every French plant of importance is in most cases an accomplished fact.

Soon to Expert Steel.

"In spite of the German invasion, France, the second greatest producer of iron ore and steel in the world, is at present producing sufficient steel and iron for home consumption. Further, she will soon be ready to export at the rate of 17,000,000 tons of iron ore per annum and 2,000,000 tons of steel. This rapid recovery of the steel industry has been made possible by,

"First, the fact that the natural conditions of the French iron mines prevented any considerable damage by the German invasion;

"Second, the restoration of the Lorraine basin to France;

"Third, the acquisition for a period of years of the Sarre basin and the acquisition of the controlling interest in certain great steel works in Luxemburg.

"Many of our steel plants, temporarily incapacitated by the Germans, will soon be placed on a productive basis again, as the machinery stolen can be easily and correctly identified, and so returned to France.

"The French textile industries were greatly damaged through the German invasion. Lille, Roubaix, Tourcoing, Sedan, the chief centres of this industry, were for four years in German hands. The return of Alsace-Lorraine, however, to a great extent compensates for this damage, and by the use of modern machinery the French textile manufacturers, who before the war exported a profitable surplus of their products, will next year be able to fill all the demands of the home market. To do this, however, they must import from America 1,000,000 bales of cotton in 1920. Here again the satisfying of this demand rests upon the extension of the credits necessary for the making of this purchase.

"Including the demands of less important industries, the total cost of the raw material and food needs of France for 1920 can be placed at an irreducible figure of $800,000,000 to $700,000,000. On the fulfilment of this demand for food and raw material rests the rapid restoration and return to prosperity of France. Without aid she would still recover, but the process of convalescence would be needlessly and uselessly prolonged. The extension of about a ten-year period of credit for this sum is necessary to France for the following reasons:

"First—To enable her to maintain at an equitable figure the costs of the necessities of life;

"Second—To insure sufficient time for the complete recovery of her industries;

"Third—To permit repayment at a rate of exchange not prohibitively unfavorable.

"Fourth—France is in the position of one whose reputation for honesty must be maintained, and desires a period of ten years in which to make repayment, because she is sure that within ten years the means available for repayment will be at hand.

Sees French Labor Stable.

"The securities for the extension of credit are three in number: First is the Frenchman's characteristic love and desire for work. The French labor situation has stabilized itself, of itself, more rapidly than that of any other country in the world. A striking proof of this stability was given at Lyons not more than two months ago, when the delegates of the great French Confederation of Labor and the Steel and Iron-workers' Union met in conference. French labor voiced to the world through its chosen representatives the motto it had adopted for itself, 'Maximum Production.'

"Further, the Frenchman and the Frenchwoman, whatever may have been said to the contrary, realize that they must and indeed are willing to pay the taxes which their Government has thought it necessary to impose upon them for the payment of the indebtedness which as French men and women they incurred during the war. The per capita taxation in 1919 of every man, woman, and child in France is $68, as compared with $50 in the United States. This burden of taxation is borne by the uninvaded four-fifths of France. The other fifth will not be taxed until it has been assured of a reasonable measure of recovery from the vandalism which it suffered.

"Second, in actual and potential natural resources, France with her colonies has practically unlimited quantities of supplies necessary to her economic and industrial development. Morocco offers a virtually untouched field for agricultural and mineral supplies. Morocco and Western Africa within three years can supply France with 30 per cent. of her raw cotton needs. The French iron and steel industry, which doubled its output in the ten years preceding the war, is assured of rapid and sound development, particularly in view of the return to France of Alsace-Lorraine.

"Third, France is financially sound. Of her total indebtedness of $40,000,000,000, 85 per cent. is in the hands of French people and is distributed among 7,000,000 investors. The remaining 15 per cent. is counterbalanced by at least an equal amount due to France by the nations of Central and Eastern Europe. A certain portion of the sums to be paid by Germany to France as reparation for war damages will be set aside as a sinking fund against the national debt.

"In a word, France is in need of ready cash to be used as working capital until the terrific investment which was made in Liberty and Right starts to bring in dividends. She needs cash now, and ten years in which to repay.

"Speaking in terms of prosperity and sound business, the world is a unit. An unnecessarily long delay in the complete restoration and natural development of France will react to the detriment not only of France and the French but also of America and Americans. We must either stand as a unit or eventually fall as a unit. As a unit we have achieved victory in the cause of right as against might; As a unit we must assure the fruits of this victory not only to America but to the world."

URGES $4,500,000 FOR ARMY CAMPS

House Military Affairs Committee Approves Expenditures and Asks Additional Amount.

DELAY BUFFALO PURCHASE

Sub-Committee to Decide Expenditure of $1,804,000 for Curtiss-Elmwood Plant.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Completion of land purchases and construction work at more than a score of army camps and fields over the country was approved today by the House Military Affairs Committee, which recommended passage of a bill granting the War Department authority to spend approximately $4,500,000 additional on these camps.

Final decision as to the acquisition of the Dayton-Wright plant, including the adjacent aviation field, at a cost of $2,740,000 more to the Government, and of the Curtiss-Elmwood aviation plant at Buffalo for $1,804,000 additional was left with a subcommittee.

The committee voted $686,300 for completing the Camp Knox (Kentucky) project, of which sum $311,000 is for land purchases. This fund will not be available, however, until Camp Taylor, Ky., is salvaged profitably.

Other expenditures for lands approved by the committee include: Watervliet (N. Y.) Arsenal, $300,000; Camp Vail, N. J., $110,000; Camp Humphreys, Va., $20,000; Kalema tract, Hawaii, $20,000; Fort Revere, Mass., $975; Midland, Michigan Saltwell site of the Chemical Warfare Service, $3,000.

For real estate at various air stations the committee approved the following: Houston, Texas, Ellington Field, $40,640; Rantoul, Ill., Chanute Field, $300,000; Memphis, Tenn., Park Field, $88,400; Sacramento, Cal., Mather Field, $76,670; Miami, Fla., Chapman Field, $71,590; Riverside, Cal., March Field, $44,000; San Antonio, Texas, Brooks Field, $160,400; San Antonio, Kelly Field No. 3, $368,000; Middletown, Penn., supply depot, $50,000; Little Rock, Ark., supply depot, $50,000; Los Angeles, Cal., Arcadia Balloon School, $50,650; Mount Clemens, Mich., Selfridge Field, $190,000.

The committee rejected War Department requests for expenditure of $900,000 at three Motor Transport Corps camps, including Camp Holabird, Md.

DEADLOCK IN DRUG STRIKE.

Brownsville Employers Willing to Discuss Compromise.

The situation of the striking drug clerks remained unchanged yesterday, according to Charles A. Affenkraut, 63 Park Row, secretary and counsel of the United Drug Clerks.

At the executive offices of the Liggett Stores it was said that less than 2 per cent. of their 2,000 clerks are on strike. "We will have these places filled by Monday," said an official. "Men are looking for work every day."

J. A. Freedburg, President of the Brownsville Apothecaries' Society, said the druggists in that district of Brooklyn are willing to recognize the drug clerks' union, to grant the wage demands and reduce working hours. They contend for a ten-hour day, while the clerks are demanding eight hours. The society has 125 druggist members.

CHURCH AID SOUGHT IN CHINA AND KOREA

Japanese Government Goes Softly Where Domestic Affairs of These Countries Is Concerned.

PLEA FROM COLLEGE HEAD

He Would Nourish the Popular Mind and Strengthen Spiritual Resources.

The Commission of Relations with the Orient of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America received yesterday a letter from Dr. K. Ibuka, President of the Presbyterian College in Tokio, in which he said that Minister of Home Affairs Tokonami of Japan had asked Christian missionaries and educators to confer with him regarding Korean and Chinese problems. He invited them to an informal luncheon.

The Minister said that the present Government had striven to do its best for China and to avoid what seemed unjust and undesirable. He said he felt that the Government had shown unusual restraint in refraining from participating in the proposed loan, which might have helped the northern party and been to the disadvantage of the southern party. With this same idea, the Government had refrained from intervention in the domestic affairs of China. He reported that a great difficulty had been the suppression of importations of opium into China, but reported it checked very effectively in Tsing-tao and Dairy. In Japan, the opium law recently amended prohibited the production of more than was needed for medical purposes.

With regard to Shantung, he said, Japan was anxious to do all that was fair and just. The Minister pointed out that the relations between China and Japan have always been close, and that what is done for one country is also good for the other.

Dr. Ibuka said in his letter:

"In regard to the Korean situation I must first mention the primary object of annexation. At that time the Japanese felt that the existing Korean administration was inadequate to lift up the condition of the Koreans, develop their latent industrial capacity, and give them better educations. In annexing Korea it was our purpose to better the condition of the people without any idea of discrimination. To my thinking, it is wrong to use the word colony for Korea, since it is a country with its own special historical development. The recent unfortunate disturbance in Korea, which was due to lack of understanding, will turn out to be a great blessing to us, because it has aroused in us a renewed purpose to do our best for the improvement of Korean affairs. I assure you there will be a remarkable change in the administration of Korea.

"I want to call your attention to a purpose that is much with me these days, the nourishment of the popular mind, the strengthening of our spiritual resources. For this purpose I have asked the co-operation of religious leaders in our country. A wholesome progress of the nation can be achieved alone by carrying out the principles of co-operation and harmony throughout all the phases of our national life; and then we may expect that our nation shall successfully meet the great forces ruling the whole world."

A letter has also been received from Dr. D. B. Schneder, President of the College of the Reformed Church at Sendai, Japan, who reports a personal interview which he had with the newly appointed Governor General of Korea, at the latter's invitation, just as he was getting out to assume his new duties. Dr. Schneder says that the New Governor General, Baron Saito, speaks English well and that they had a simple heart-to-heart talk about the Korean situation and the proposals of the Japanese Government for reform measures.

The Baron stated that it was his purpose to accord equal treatment to the Koreans in all respects, that much liberality would be shown them with reference to their own language, that the endeavor would be made to prevent all harshness and unkindness toward the people on the part of both officials and non-officials, and that he was planning to inaugurate a measure of self-government through the establishment of local popular assemblies. He hoped that in the course of some years Korean representatives would be allowed to sit in the Japanese National Diet. Baron Saito expressed high appreciation of the work of the missionaries, and said that their labors would be exceedingly helpful toward working out the welfare of the Korean people.

Dr. Schneder reports that he has since confirmed the details of this interview by letters exchanged with the Governor General. He reports that following the attempt on his life upon his arrival in Korea, the Governor did not make the occurrence the occasion for indiscriminate arrests of suspects, but showed a calm, lenient spirit. He concludes:

"Whether the new Governor General can carry through his purposes remains to be seen, but that he is entirely sincere I thoroughly believe. I earnestly hope that his efforts may be met with an open mind. I have increasing confidence in the Hara Cabinet. I believe it is growing stronger in its efforts for better things. I am confident that the slogan of the Christian world should be, 'Back up the better element in Japan.' This better element is the key to the whole Oriental situation. The changes that has already taken place in the thinking people is marvelous."

SHONTS EXECUTORS ASK TO OUST WIDOW

Seek to Have Surrogate Revoke Letters of Administration Granted to Her.

ORDER SERVED AT HER HOME

Attorneys Say She Will Contest Validity of Interborough President's Will.

An order from the Surrogates' Court was served yesterday on Mrs. Milla D. Shonts, widow of Theodore P. Shonts, President of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, directing her to show cause why the temporary letters of administration of the estate, which were granted to her Thursday, should not be revoked. The order, which was served at Mrs. Shonts's apartment at 570 Park Avenue, is returnable tomorrow, and argument will be heard by Surrogate Fowler Tuesday.

The action is the first step of the executors under the will filed Friday to have Mrs. Shonts removed as administratrix. Under the will, of the existence of which Mrs. Shonts said in her application for letters of administration she had merely a "suspicion," the wife of the former traction President would receive only a life insurance policy of ,000 and a portrait of herself by Prince Troubetzkoy. The residuary estate, estimated at $475,000, goes to Mrs. Amanda C. Thomas, formerly the wife of Herbert F. Thomas, a son of the late O. F. Thomas, a banker.

De Lancey Nicoll, personal counsel for Mr. Shonts and an executor of the will, obtained the order Thursday about the time the will was filed. At the office of Cornelius J. Sullivan, 61 Broadway, counsel for the executors, it was said he had served the order yesterday morning. Attorneys for Mrs. Shonts are asked to prove that the court had not been "deceived and imposed upon."

Mrs. Shonts has made no statement for publication. Inquiries at her apartment were referred to her counsel, George W. Files and Warren Dixon, 115 Broadway.

Mrs. Thomas, who lives at 830 Park Avenue, in the same building in which Mr. Shonts lived when he died, was said yesterday to be somewhere on Long Island. It was said she would not return before Tuesday or Wednesday. She is President of the Davis & Sanford Company, photographers, of 597 Fifth Avenue.

Attorneys for Mrs. Shonts said the attempt to have her removed as administratrix would be fought. They said also they would file a notice of contest of the will. It is understood the Duchesse de Chaulnes and her sister, Mrs. Marguerite Bingham, are supporting their mother in the attempt to break it, as he will because of its generous provision for Mrs. Thomas. Under the will the daughters receive trust funds of $100,000 each. It is provided that any beneficiary should attempt to break the will such action automatically would annul her bequest, which then would go to Mrs. Thomas.

MRS. IVES WINS DIVORCE.

Gets Decree Against W. E. Ives, Prussian Officer Who Returned.

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 8.—Mrs. Dorothy Redfield Ives, daughter of William T. Redfield, banker, has obtained a divorce in Indianapolis from Walter Edgar Ives, formerly a Lieutenant in the Royal Prussian 13th Dragoons. Their marriage was a social event in this city in 1913, but they have been separated for three years.

Ives was born in Baden-Baden in 1883 of an American father and a German mother. He was in this country when the war broke out and wrote opinions on its strategy from the German point of view for New York newspapers, several of his predictions proving correct. Early in 1915 he told several friends he wanted to return to Germany and join the army. A few months later he disappeared.

The British Government put detectives on his trail, and the Redfield house here was watched night and day for weeks. Ives never came here, however, but worked his way across the ocean as a stoker on a Scandinavian steamer. He remained six months in Germany, returning here on a Standard Oil tanker, to be held up at Ellis Island by the authorities. He was finally released on a promise to remain neutral. By that time he had taken out first naturalization papers, but in the baggage of Captain von Papen, captured at Falmouth, were found letters of his, stating that he was doing his utmost to aid the German cause by his writings here.

After his release Ives went West, and his wife alleged that he did not thereafter contribute to her support. He is now working for a tire-manufacturing company in Indianapolis.

Mrs. Ives is now living at 820 Park Avenue, New York City, and her father and mother are visiting her there.

HIGH TIDE STOPS FERRY.

Two Lives Lost When Flood Capsizes Tugboat in Hell Gate.

The third successive high tide in the North River again tied up the Erie Railroad ferry line, at the foot of Chambers Street, during the rush hours yesterday morning. The piers on the New Jersey side were flooded and passengers could not board the boats. Cellars were flooded along West Street, and the Grand Street Ferry cars were stopped at Broadway because the water flooded the channel rail.

At Hell Gate in the East River the tide was so strong that the tugboat Westchester was thrown against an empty coal scow she was towing. The tug capsized, and Edward Reilly of Green Street, Greenpoint, her skipper, and James Devin, a deckhand, of 839 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, were drowned.

In West Street, between Barclay and Chambers Streets, the water was sixteen inches deep. Stores at the end of Vesey Street were unable to do business until their premises had been pumped out.

Planks were placed leading to the Lackawanna Railroad ferry at Barclay Street to enable passengers to get to and from the slips. Houses along South Street, near Fulton Street, on the East River front, also were flooded.

The tide interfered with big ships leaving their piers. Sandbags were used at the tube stations in Jersey City to keep the water from flowing down to the platform and tunnels.

AND swift responsive fingers this side of the water, plying their gay sophisticated magic, did the rest—not omitting even that enviable French dash. Wrought with a care so exquisite, and a skill so rich in imagination, these wraps and dresses, copied from our imports, prove that not all the brilliancy of the mode trails along the glad, light boulevards of the city dear to fame.

Perhaps it is a wise little curve, cloudlike, billowing over a slender gleam of ribbon—it may be, though, intricate twinklings of beads, or here a blur of midnight colored fur, there a butterfly movement of lace—at any rate, each gown and wrap talks the language of France.

They have the amazing genius of Paris, these suave translations of the work of the modistes.

OFFICIAL VERSION OF 27TH'S EXPLOITS

30th Division's Breaking of the Hindenburg Line Also Described by Chief of Staff.

OPERATIONS IN DETAIL

Statement is Designed to Correct Inaccuracies in Former Reports of Their Advance.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The office of the Chief of Staff of the Army today authorized the publication of a prepared statement designed to correct misunderstanding as to the part played by two American divisions—the Twenty-seventh, or New York National Guard division, and the Thirtieth, composed of National Guard troops from North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee—in the successful operations against the Hindenburg Line on the British front in September and October, 1918.

Accounts of the operation of these two divisions have been inaccurate in some respects, according to officials of the War Department, and the statement issued today is designed to give the official version of what was actually done by the American troops in one of the important actions of the world war.

Some statements concerning the operations of the Twenty-seventh and the Thirtieth Divisions have been based on German versions of the cracking of the Hindenburg Line.

The General Staff accounts shows that both divisions were in the thickest of some of the hardest fighting of the war, and conducted themselves with great gallantry. The task set them, in cooperation with two British and one Australian corps, was to drive the Germans from the Bellacourt Tunnel of the St. Quentin-Cambrai Canal, one of the strongest positions occupied by the enemy. The American troops, which formed the Second Army Corps, accomplished their object, in spite of many difficulties, including fog and smoke. Particular mention is made in the General Staff statement of the 117th Infantry, (Tennessee National Guard,) and the 120th Infantry, (North Carolina National Guard), both of the Thirtieth Division, for their excellent work. The 54th Infantry Brigade of the 27th and 119th Regiments of the Thirtieth were enfiladed by machine gun fire.

The text of the statement follows:

"In September, 1918, the 2d American Corps (27th and 30th Divisions) was placed at the disposal of the Fourth British Army for operations against the Hindenburg line east of Peronne.

"On the night of September 23-24 the 30th Division took over what was known as the Nauroy sector, with a front of 3,750 yards, about 1,000 yards west of the main Hindenburg line and approximately on the old Hindenburg outpost line. On the next night the 27th Division took over the Gouy sector, on the left of the 30th Division and connecting with it; its front was 4,500 yards, approximately along the old British front line trenches, very close to the Hindenburg outpost line.

"On Sept. 27, a preliminary operation was undertaken, to straighten the line of the 30th Division, and to bring the 27th up to the start line for the main attack. The 30th Division succeeded but by the afternoon of Sept. 28 the 27th Division was back nearly in its original position.

attacked, supported by the Australian Corps. The 2d British Corps attacked simultaneously on its right, and the 3d British Corps on its left. The attack was to be led by tanks, behind a rolling barrage. The start line was slightly to the east of the Hindenburg outpost line, and the objective east of Nauroy and Gouy. The plan provided that after the Americans had reached their objectives the Australians were to pass through them and continue in the advance.

"The 30th Division was already on the start line, close behind the initial line of the barrage. The 27th, however, had not yet been able to take three strong points, the Knoll, Guillemont Farm, and Quennemont Farm, and was consequently about 1,000 yards behind the barrage line, which was east of them. The question of changing the barrage lines for this division was raised, but decided in the negative, the brigade designated to make the attack having reported at 6 P. M. on the 28th that it expected to be within 400 yards of the barrage lines or possibly even on the intended starting line before the hour for attack.

"The barrage fell as planned at 5:50 A. M., Sept. 29, stood for four minutes on the initial line, and then advanced at the rate of 100 yards in four minutes. The 30th Division advanced behind it, 60th Brigade in first line. The 117th Infantry was to follow across the Tunnel, then deploy, facing south, and cover the right of the Australians after the relief. Arrangements were made to seize the southern exit of the Tunnel, which lay in the division sector.

"The German barrage was not heavy, but nevertheless there were many casualties, especially in the support battalions. Smoke and fog rendered it difficult to keep direction and contact. The 120th Infantry, on the right, crossed the Hindenburg line and occupied Nauroy, the 117th reached its proper position, facing southeast and connecting the 120th with the 40th British Division. The 119th, however, on the left, was enfiladed by machine guns from its own left, and had to form a defensive flank in that direction, reaching back to the tunnel and then connecting with the 27th Division. A battalion of the 117th and one of the 118th were sent to support this flank. In this position the Australians passed through the lines and relieved the 30th Division, on the afternoon of Sept. 29th.

"In the 27th Division, the 54th Infantry Brigade made the attack under the same difficulties on account of fog and smoke. It also received machine gun fire in enfilade from the direction of Vendhuile, outside its sector to the left. Part of the right regiment, the 108th, by a detour to the south, avoided Quennemont Farm and reached the Hindenburg line south of Bony. Groups from all attacking battalions succeeded in penetrating between the strong points and reaching the Hindenburg line; but by dusk only the extreme right retained its footing in that line. Here the division was relieved by the Australians and remained in support; numerous groups, however, aggregating over 1,000 men, remained with the Australians and assisted them in cleaning up the Hindenburg line on the right, taking it throughout the rest of the sector, and occupying part of the village of Bony.

"'The following is a quotation from the dispatch of Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, dated Jan. 7, 1919:

"'North of Belleglis the 30th American Division (Major Gen. E. M. Lewis) having broken through the deep defenses of the Hindenburg line, stormed Bellicourt and seized Nauroy.'

"'On their left the 27th American Division (Major Gen. J. F. O'Ryan) met with very heavy enfilade machine gun fire, but pressed on with great gallantry as far as Bony, where a bitter struggle took place for the possession of the village.'"

CALLS ASIA A DANGER SPOT.

Dr. Bible Sees Peril Ahead Through Lack of Morals.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, Nov. 8.—Asia's unrest and need for education were the subject of an address today by the Rev. Dr. F. W. Bible, a Presbyterian missionary, before the National Training Conference of the Inter-Church World Movement, at its closing session.

"The war has accelerated the problems of industry in Asia," he said. "China today is still at the hand stage but Japan has moved forward in copying our own industrial systems. This has resulted in bringing the Japanese people to their cities and in bringing boys and girls to environments where all safeguards are swept aside. Tokio today is one of the most degraded spots in the world.

"There is enough brain power in China and Japan to do anything, but there is not enough moral power in those countries together to do anything. I warn you that unless the seething masses now growing in Asia as no other group of people in history ever grew can be taught, God only knows what your children and mine may have to face.

"There are 800,000,000 people in Asia today and by 1950, according to reliable estimates, the population will have reached 1,100,000,000."

A living wage for ministers was discussed at the morning session by Joseph B. Hingeley of Chicago, head of the Ministerial Relief Work of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

PASS SHIP SALE BILL.

House Measure Provides for Building Up of Merchant Marine.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—A bill outlining a permanent policy regarding the merchant marine was passed today by the House with practically no opposition. The measure provides for the sale of the Government fleet to American citizens and for continuation of the Shipping Board with regulatory powers.

Final vote on the measure was 238 to 8. The bill now goes to the Senate. Under it the Shipping Board is authorized to dispose of vessels at prevailing market prices, with a time limit of 10 years for full payment. Sale to aliens is prohibited, unless the vessels are not wanted by American citizens. Insurance of vessels continues as under the Shipping Board policy. Building operations are to be curtailed as soon as possible.

GIRL HELD IN TAXI HOLDUP.

Sea Cliff Young Woman Charged with Being Soldier's Accomplice.

Miss Gladys Brundage, 19 years old of Fifteenth Avenue, Sea Cliff, L. I., was arraigned in the Jamaica Police Court yesterday on a charge of being the accomplice of a soldier who is alleged to have assaulted and robbed a taxicab driver in Queens Village on the night of Oct. 27. She pleaded not guilty and was held on a short affidavit until tomorrow.

Miss Brundage was arrested Friday night by Detectives Harden and Kehoe of the Jamaica precinct. The police assert that Miss Brundage was returning home from Manhattan with a soldier when the chauffeur, Jacob Anten of 99 Jackson Avenue, Mineola, L. I., was told to stop his car and see if a rear tire was flat. When the driver got out of the car, according to the police, he was struck four times on the head with a blackjack, fracturing his skull. Anten told the police that when he regained consciousness, his taxicab was gone and so were his watch and chain and $8. He was taken to St. Mary's Hospital, Jamaica, but is now at his home in a serious condition.

CARUSO BACK AGAIN, CHARMED BY MEXICO

Tenor Overwhelmed by Reception in Carranza's Capital —Wants to Go Again.

NO BRIGANDS FOUND HIM

Says Country Seems Prosperous and People Content and Industrious.

Enrico Caruso returned to New York last night from Mexico City, full of enthusiasm over his tour in that country and over the gold currency which, he said, was in circulation in that country in $2.50, $5, and $10 pieces. He traveled from Mexico on a special train, entering the United States at Laredo, Texas, and arriving at the Pennsylvania Station at 6:30 o'clock.

"Before I went to Mexico," he said, when seen at his apartments in the Hotel Knickerbocker, "I heard that the people and the country were 'bad' and that I might not get my money. I have been most agreeably surprised. Truthfully, I am enchanted with Mexico and hope to go there again.

"In my twenty-five years on the operatic stage I have never been treated with such exceeding kindness and hospitality as there. With previous contracts I have always had some expenses to pay out of my own pocket. But on this trip I did not have to pay one cent from New York back to New York.

"A house was provided for me to live in during my six weeks' stay in Mexico City, and Mexican girls who had been trained in an Italian family did the cooking. The stores are excellent, the people quiet and industrious. The country, as much of it as I saw, appeared prosperous. The electric street car system is good, and the Mexicans have small, open motor vehicles with ten seats, which carry passengers rapidly [illegible] all principal points at 1 and 2 cents Mex.

"The receipts for the opera averaged from $20,000 to $30,000 a night, and the people yelled for me to come again. At my last performance in the ball ring, there were 20,000 present. We gave an act from 'Manon,' 'Pagliacci,' and 'Elisir d'Amore.' After it was over, the audience swarmed into the arena and hugged and kissed me until my breath was almost gone. A troop of cavalry had to come an hour later to get my automobile away, because of the people standing on it to talk to me."

"Did you see any brigands?" was asked.

"I did not," he replied. "I did not go to the mountains to look for them. I understand these banditti are revolutionists, each trying to place his individual party at the head of affairs. I did not see President Carranza, but he wrote me a very kind letter and placed a private railroad car at my disposal.

"Two days before I left Mexico City, the Minister of the Interior sent his Chief of the Press Bureau to see me and asked how I liked Mexico. He particularly asked if I had been paid, and I replied I had received every centime due me.

"It has been my experience that wherever one goes the people will treat one well if one carries out one's contract. Even cannibals are appreciative and will applaud if you give them something good. Some small artists have gone to Mexico City who were not competent to fulfill their contracts and the management has sent them away. They have returned and complained they were not paid.

"The Mexican skies are blue like those of Italy, but the climate is heavy for strangers. I suffered a little the first two weeks. I prefer to sing in the Opera House rather than the bull ring because there is no privacy in the ring, and if an artist sneezes at the side the people think it part of the opera."

TITLE SEARCHERS STRIKE.

Employes of Queens Concern Demand Increase in Pay.

Fourteen employes of the title searching department of the Jamaica Branch of the United States Title Guaranty Company, including three girls, struck yesterday for more pay. The leaders asserted that employes of other title companies would probably strike.

The Associated Title Workers, employes of title companies throughout the city, will meet tomorrow evening in Jamaica, and the attitude of the members will be determined by vote. The Associated Title Workers was organized several months ago to obtain better pay. The title companies refused to accept collective bargaining, but soon after the organization was formed all of the companies except the United States Title Guaranty Company increased wages.

VANISHES ON WEDDING EVE.

Suitor Mysteriously "Dies" After Planning Ceremony.

Details of the plans of Miss Sophie Loderhose of 1,447 Dean Street, Brooklyn, to be married to an apparently phantom bridegroom, were disclosed yesterday by W. W. Phillips of 317 Putnam Avenue, Brooklyn, a brother-in-law of the young woman, to clear up reports that had been current among the congregation of Immanuel Lutheran Church.

For a time, Mr. Phillips said, Miss Loderhose received attentions from a young man who called himself "Dr. A. William Hoffmann, Jr." The doctor said he was a relative of Vincent Astor, very wealthy, with an extensive and lucrative practice. He said he owned sumptuous homes in Pasadena, Cal., and Millbrook, N. Y. According to Mr. Phillips, Dr. Hoffmann was sometimes accompanied by his father, Dr. Hoffmann, Sr.

After a time the engagement was announced and the wedding date set for next Tuesday in Immanuel Church. Dr. John C. Holthausen, the pastor, was asked to officiate, but the organist was told two musicians from the Metropolitan Opera Company would furnish the music.

Flowers, worth $3,000, principally orchids, were ordered from the Wilson Floral Company, Brooklyn. An order for a $50,000 organ was placed with a Brooklyn firm, and a contractor was told to estimate on the cost of widening the middle aisle.

Announcement of these preparations aroused the interest of every one. Then a "telegram" to Miss Loderhose—which was delivered over the telephone—supposed to be from French Lick Springs, Ind., it said Dr. Hoffmann, Jr., had been killed in an automobile accident that day, Oct. 29.

After her first grief Miss Loderhose requested Mr. Phillips to insert a death notice in the newspapers. He did so, and shortly afterward telegrams of sympathy, bearing the names of Mr. Astor, ex-President Taft, and others, began to stream in. Meantime, Dr. Holthausen decided to investigate. He said yesterday he had wired to French Lick, to Pasadena, and Millbrook, and had been told that neither of the Drs. Hoffmann was known in those places.

Miss Loderhose, an orphan, was described as a pretty girl, with blonde hair and black eyes. She is 25 years old, and was graduated from the Brooklyn Girls' High School. It was said at her home that she was prostrated.

Preparing for the entre of a gay season, our Salons have culled the newest of La Mode's creations. Here are gowns resplendent with sparkling beads and gleaming fabrics, or quaintly picturesque with puffs and bouffants—or yet again, naively simple, the better to display some rich, rare material of which they are fashioned.

Never, not even in the days when knighthood was in flower, was color so opulent! Jade, allied in mermaid fashion with Silver, Orchid, Bleu de France, Canary, Apricot, the odd shades of Rose, Coral and Cerise, appear in Gowns of notable beauty; Black, glittering with Gold, Silver, or Sequins of Twilight Blue or vivid Green, make up enchanting models.

Yet for all their splendor, the prices are modest.

Dress Trimmings

That are as High Lights to the Costume

Most Modestly Priced

Just as the high lights in a painting accentuate its beauty, just so do the silken swaying fringe, bits of bright broche, tinseled laces and exquisite embroideries complete the perfect costume.

Tunics and bodices, resplendent with sparkling beads, need but a wisp of cloth to make a gorgeous costume. Spangled sequins that glisten on backgrounds of net form girdles more alluring than Cleopatra in all her glory could boast of.

And then, to add a touch of color contrast, are floral garnitures —a red, red rose, perhaps, or flowers of paler tone.

BERLIN IS LIVING AS IF BELEAGUERED

Difficult to Get Out of the City by Railroad, Motor, or Airship.

BLOCKADE TO SAVE FUEL

Strict Rules as to Telegrams and Telephone Messages, Too, and Mails Are Uncertain.

By GEORGE RENWICK.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Nov. 8.—In Berlin we are now living as in a beleaguered city. It is, as a matter of fact, almost as difficult to get out of the German capital as it was to leave besieged Paris in that Winter of nearly half a century ago. Then some persons who did manage to escape went by air. Today in Berlin there has been a great run on the offices of companies controlling air services by persons having urgent business in other parts of the country, now without passenger trains; but benzine is exceedingly scarce, and very few airplanes will be available. Most of them will be used for forwarding mails to the chief German cities. The passenger Zeppelin Bodensee has gone to Friedrichshafen, but without passengers. She carried two tons of letters for South Germany.

A few persons with imperative reasons for travel are being allowed to journey by goods trains. A small Summer pleasure steamer will be used tomorrow to take 200 people to Stettin, and on Sunday there will be a similar river and canal trip to Magdeburg.

No taxicab man will take you out of the city. His license does not permit him to do so even were he willing to risk his war-worn army tires, which would soon be in ribbons on Brandenburg's rough highways. No motor omnibuses are running in the city, and between midnight and 6 o'clock in the morning no taxicab is allowed to ply for hire.

You may not send a telegram of good wishes to a friend. Such amenity is "verboten" owing to the crowded telegraph wires. Nor are you allowed to send parcels. You are officially urged to think twice before using the telephone. The mails come and go on goods trains. English papers and letters from England dispatched in mid-October are slowly filtering through the lines of economic confusion which stretch so far beyond the city.

This great capital has really fallen back a century in time. Indeed, travel conditions in the old coaching days were better than they are at the moment.

This very necessary blockade has some curious results. Many concerts are abandoned, since the artists cannot reach the city. In the courts accused persons can easily obtain bail without sureties because the chances of flight are reduced to a minimum. Profiteers are hard hit. They cannot bring their high-priced goods to the shops, so prices are again soaring, while the value of the mark has fallen lower than ever before.

I have called this "blockade" very necessary, and so it is. Coal supplies in Berlin and in all the great cities are perilously low, and it is urgently necessary to run all possible traffic on the railways, to increase those reserves. If this early and bitterly cold weather is not to be a time of utter misery and tragedy to hundreds of thousands of city dwellers.

Next in importance to the supply of coal comes that of potatoes. The potato crop generally is lifted by mid-October. This year labor conditions are such that the work will not be completed for another week or ten days. The loss will be severe unless the Government's measures are in time to save great quantities of that harvest, on which the poorer classes depend so greatly.

GOVERNOR HELPS ACTORS.

Makes Dec. 5 a Memorial Day in West Virginia.

The first official recognition by a State Government of the value of the Actors' Fund of America reached headquarters of the managers of the National Memorial Day campaign in the Hotel Commodore yesterday in the form of a proclamation by John J. Cornwell, Governor of West Virginia. Governor Cornwell calls upon the people of his State to observe Dec. 5 as a memorial day and to help make the benefits scheduled for the Actors' Fund on that day successful. The proclamation says:

"During the world war the men and women of the actors' profession were not only thoroughly loyal to America, but were most active and efficient in all the various campaigns to raise war funds, whether in the sale of Government bonds, in aid of the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, or the Y. M. C. A.

"In commemoration of their splendid work, as well as to honor the memory of the actors who gave their lives in the service of their country the 5th day of December, 1919, has been set apart as Actors' Memorial Day to properly commemorate the sacrifices and the work of the actors of America, as well as to put the Actors' Fund on a firm financial basis, that they may continue their work of aiding the destitute, the sick and disabled, by giving special performances on that date in all principal theatres for the benefit of the fund.

"The people, in generous recognition of the patriotic and humanitarian work of the actors will want to aid, and I therefore recommend an enthusiastic observance of Dec. 5, Actors' Memorial Day, in West Virginia.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed.

"Done at the Capitol, in the City of Charleston, this the 4th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, and in the fifty-seventh year of the State.

"JOHN J. CORNWELL, Governor.

"By the Governor:

"HOUSTON G. YOUNG,
"Secretary of State."

URGES COMPULSORY LABOR

German General Advocates Work Instead of Military Service.

BERLIN, Oct. 30. (Associated Press.)—General von François, who commanded an army corps in Poland in the war, has suggested that Germany adopt a system of compulsory labor for young men in lieu of obligatory military service.

By his scheme physically and mentally fit youths would be drafted for a year when they become twenty years of age. They would be confined to barracks, clothed, fed, and receive pocket money at the expense of the State, while the products of their labor would go to the State.

General von François states that work is the sole salvation of Germany, and that when the importance of compulsory labor legislation filters into the minds of legislators, enactment of such a law will be a simple matter.

Don Carlos Is Made Captain General

SEVILLE, Spain, Nov. 7.—It is announced in the newspapers here that Don Carlos, Infante of Spain, will be appointed Captain General of the Southern District, with his residence here. His appointment to this position, it is commented, would add to its importance and create a more interesting social atmosphere in Seville.

1,999 OFFICERS QUIT SINCE WAR ENDED

More Than One-fourth of Combatant Commanders Find Pay Too Low.

ARMY SERIOUSLY MENACED

Distress Over Struggle to Live Has Weakened Morale, Says General Staff Report.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Up to noon today more than one-fourth of all the officers of the combatant army, who were in the regular army when the armistice was signed, have resigned, and scores of other resignations were waiting the action of the President and the Secretary of War. The total number of resignations accepted up to noon today was 1,999, which means that 32 per cent. of all the officers in the Coast Artillery Corps, 30 per cent. of the officers of the field artillery, 24 per cent. of the cavalry officers, 28 per cent. of the infantry officers, and 16 per cent. of the official personnel of the Corps of Engineers have left the service.

The officers who are quitting the service, and more have resigned since the armistice than resigned during the entire history of the regular army prior to November, 1918, are the younger officers, the Lieutenants and Captains the ones who can least be spared. Virtually none of the field officers, whose salaries make it possible for them to make both ends meet during this present period of high cost of living, are resigning.

Army in Serious Condition.

"The army," says a memorandum just issued by the Morale Division of the General Staff, "is in a very serious condition. The extraordinary high cost of the necessities of life has so reduced the standard of living to which officers have heretofore been accustomed, that there has resulted a profound state of discontent and low morale in the service. • • • Those who resign are men of high initiative, force, energy, and self-reliance, military qualities which the army can ill afford to lose."

The officers of the army are now being paid on the salary scale passed by Congress in 1908, since which time no increases have been granted. In numerous instances the situation in which the younger married officers find themselves, as a result of their inadequate incomes, borders on the pathetic. It is of record that in scores of cases they have had to cancel their life insurance to sell their Liberty bonds, while their wives and daughters attend to all domestic work.

"The Army," the Morale Division memorandum continues, "is suffering economically from the great depreciation of the dollar. If money could be given something approaching its former value, or if the cost of the ordinary necessities of life could be lowered to approximately what it was before the war, no other relief would be necessary or desired. But, if a readjustment of the purchasing power of the dollar cannot be assured, the only recourse would seem to be to restore in part at least the modest standards of service formerly attained by officers and men by a greater aggregate in nominal pay.

Cannot Live on Their Pay.

"Officers find that under present conditions they simply cannot live on their slender pay, the purchasing power of which has been halved, and maintain themselves and their families in a modest and decent manner. They are financially embarrassed, to a degree which jeopardizes efficiency. They state that the cost of food, clothing, shelter, fuel, lights, and sundries consume the pay and allowances, and often more, without permitting them to make any provision for the future, forcing them to draw upon their meagre savings, preventing them from educating their children, and from indulging in the most modest and ordinary recreations.

"What applies to officers in regard to difficulties in cost of living applies also to enlisted men. The economic pressure rests particularly heavily on the non-commissioned officers, especially those with families. This worthy class has rightly been called the 'backbone of the army.'"

The Military Academy at West Point also is suffering as a result of the continuance of the low salary scale of 1908. In the last two years 169 West Point cadets have resigned, where in the ten years preceding only 113 left the academy through resignation.

The answer to the problem now facing the country, on the solution of which depends the future of the military establishment, is in the hands of Congress, which now has before it a bill to increase the salary of officers of the army, navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service 50 per cent. and the pay of all enlisted men 25 per cent.

ITALY STRENGTHENS POLICE

Royal Guards Formed to Curb Disorder—Army to be Reorganized.

ROME, Nov. 7.—The Italian Government is taking measures to strengthen the semi-military forces for the maintenance of order in case of civil disturbances.

A new corps, known as the Royal Guards, has been organized to act in a police capacity for the protection of the public. The corps of Carabinieri (military police) will be considerably reinforced for the same purpose.

A thorough reorganization of the army on a new and modern basis will be undertaken after the completion of demobilization. The term of military service will be reduced, reservists will be called up for frequent short periods of training, and practically all exemptions from service, under which larger numbers of young men have hitherto escaped military duty, will be suppressed.

The measures of demobilization will include the sale of surplus army stocks, restoration to owners of all requisitioned buildings and lands, and the retirement of numerous officers of high rank.

The Prince also regretted that he had not been equipped with a dozen hands to take care of all the hearty handshakes he had been offered.

WITHDRAWS FROM PARADA.

Port Chester Contractor Joins in Criticism of Young Women's Garb.

Special to The New York Times.

PORT CHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 8.—The climax of the sensation caused by the Rev. Harry B. Heald's denunciation of gowns worn by young women appearing in the parada for the Woman's Club benefit, came today when Frank J. Kinney, a New York contractor, living here, came out in support of the Rev. Mr. Heald. He said: "Having noticed my name in the published list of patrons of the parada, I have today requested Mrs. Chester A. Studwell, Patroness Committee Chairman, to remove by name. I have also advised the Rev. Mr. Heald of my act, stating I agree with him absolutely in the stand he has taken relative to the parada. Mr. Kinney's daughter, Miss Anita Kinney, a kindergarten teacher here, is taking part in the parada.

At last night's meeting of the Board of Education, which has supervision over the auditorium where the parada is being given, Mrs. George M. Reynolds, the only woman member of the board, said that she considered the parada the most beautiful spectacle ever given in Port Chester. Fifteen hundred persons crowded into the Auditorium tonight to witness the concluding performance.

WANT FINLEY TO END CITY SCHOOL 'CHAOS'

Association Agrees with Superintendent Ettinger's Contention Against By-Laws.

HOLD HEARING THIS WEEK

Situation Arising Out of Squabble with Board of Education Called Disgraceful.

"An issue of such fundamental importance as to make it imperative for all thoughtful citizens to study carefully the questions involved" will be presented to the people of this city next Friday at a hearing before the State Commissioner of Education, John H. Finley, according to a statement issued yesterday by the Public Education Association. The issue, the association says, hinges upon the questions: "Is the Superintendent of Schools actually of only nominally the chief executive of the New York City schools? Can the Board of Education legally designate its President or any one else to be, in effect, a super-superintendent to him? Or must it, as long as it retains him as Superintendent, act through him in all administrative matters as its chief executive?"

It is pointed out that for months the schools have been "notoriously demoralized by the unseemly squabbles between the Board of Education and its professional staff." "It is time," the report says, "that this disgraceful performance were stopped. So serious, indeed, has the situation become that the real function of the public schools, the rearing of children, has been almost lost sight of in the contest for power and control."

Dr. Ettinger characterizes the provisions of the by-laws as a "deliberate attempt to usurp authority rightly lodged with the Superintendent of Schools." He states the theories underlying the by-laws to which he objects as follows:

That the Board of Education shall retain absolute control over all matters of school administration, whether they be of great magnitude or minute detail.

That the Board of Education shall assume exclusive control of the so-called business matters of the board, thereby limiting the Superintendent of Schools to the supervision and direction of pedagogical matters.

That the power to adopt by-laws, rules and regulations enables the Board of Education to assume and to delegate certain powers not conferred by statute, thereby curtailing and limiting the power of the Superintendent of Schools and his professional associates, irrespective of the sweeping powers granted them by law, thus destroying the general scheme of providing a subordination of authority, which is one of the basic features of the statute.

The Public Education Association comments thus:

"To the average citizen, the position of the Superintendent on all these points appears sound and reasonable.

"In regard to the first, he maintains that the paid expert staff, under the direction of the City Superintendent, should be responsible for the details of administration and that the lay Board of Education should concern itself with formulating general policies and checking up the manner in which the expert staff performs its duties. Can any one take issue with such a sensible proposition? Why have a paid expert staff at all if not to take care of the details of expert functions? And how can the Board of Education retain the perspective so essential to the welfare of the schools if its attention is continually absorbed in minor details?

"In regard to the second point, he maintains that the business affairs of the board are so intimately related to the pedagogical affairs that both should be under the close supervision and control of one directing head, the Superintendent of Schools, who is directly responsible to the board as a whole."

The report then goes on to show that business matters in the board are virtually dependent upon decisions made by the pedagogical expert, that school supplies, school buildings and their equipment are conditioned by sound educational practice. It maintains that there is no such thing as "business" in the abstract, that "there is something hypnotic about the word 'business' that leads the superficially minded into thinking of it as a peculiar gift which, when possessed by a given individual, may be applied successfully by him to anything anywhere, whether he knows anything fundamental about it or not." "Such a business man," it continues, "is conceived of as one who can go into any field and 'run it in a practical' way, just like that! Sensible people, particularly business men, know that such a conception is all tommyrot: that you can't run anything right unless you understand the factors involved."

In conclusion the statement says:

"It is to be hoped, therefore, that the decision of the State Commissioner will bring order out of this unfortunate chaos."

Jersey to Observe Armistice Day.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 8.—A proclamation calling upon the people to observe Nov. 11 as Armistice Day, "in honor of the brave and consecrated men through whose devotion to duty and to country our institutions remain firm and inviolate," was issued today by Governor William N. Runyon.

NAMES "UNKNOWN WOMAN."

Florence Walton Files Complaint in Divorce Suit Against Maurice.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Nov. 8.—In spite of apparent attempts at secrecy, it was learned today that the summons and complaint in a suit for divorce brought by Mrs. Florence Walton Mouvet against Maurice Mouvet, each a noted dancer, has been filed in the Westchester County Supreme Court. In her complaint, Mrs. Mouvet mentions an "unknown woman" as corespondent.

The complaint was served on Mouvet at 4 West Fiftieth Street, Manhattan, where, it is alleged, he had been in company of the co-respondent. Mouvet's answer is a general denial of the charge.

Supreme Court Justice Platt yesterday named Oscar Leroy Warren as referee to take testimony in the suit. The application for the referee was made by A. H. Mittleman of Manhattan, counsel for Mrs. Mouvet. According to Mr. Mittleman, there is a possibility that the suit may not go any further. He intimated that there might be a reconciliation.

It was reported today that Referee Warren would begin his hearings in the case next week.

This action was taken upon the recommendation of the Commanding General of the American forces in Germany to overcome the food shortage in the American area and to prevent social restlessness.

SEES WORK AHEAD FOR THE RED CROSS

Major Gen. O'Ryan Makes Plea for Continuing Peace-Time Efforts of Organization.

STILL GIVING AID TO EUROPE

Large Tasks Among Soldiers, Their Families and Civilians in America, Officer Says.

By MAJOR GEN. JOHN F. O'RYAN.

"When I accepted the chairmanship of the Atlantic Division for the Third Roll Call I did so in appreciation of the truly remarkable work of the Red Cross in France. Upon assuming the duties of the office I found that people asked questions concerning the Red Cross and its future—questions which should be answered, and answered, if possible, in a way that will make clear the importance of this drive for renewed and increased membership. A frequent question was, 'Why a new drive? I thought the war was over.' Another was, 'Who are the Red Cross? Who is back of the Red Cross?'

"The Red Cross effort in the war is not over, nor can it be discontinued for some time. A few facts will make this clear. In Serbia, for example, where education was suspended during hostilities, the Red Cross is feeding the children and aiding in the re-establishment of the school work. It is estimated that there are 3,000,000 war orphans in Serbia. In that country the Red Cross has also established a factory for the manufacture of artificial limbs to aid wounded soldiers. Again in Siberia the Red Cross gathered together 12,000 children who were found wandering alone, and has established a colony of them. In various parts of Europe the Red Cross is fighting typhus, and during the last six months has appropriated $1,800,000 for the purpose. It maintains a special typhus train, equipped with special disinfecting outfit, which operates in various parts of Siberia.

"As a result of the war more than 500,000 Greeks fled to islands in the Aegean, where the Red Cross is now distributing clothing and furnishing medical attendance. The Governor of Macedonia recently issued a public statement in which he declared the American Red Cross had saved the lives of more than 50,000 inhabitants in Southern Serbia during the past five months. These are but a few characteristic activities of the Red Cross in Europe at the present time.

Sees Effect at Home.

"Great as is our sympathy for the sufferings of Europe, we are necessarily more interested in our own people, and it is this field which will furnish the greatest opportunity for the peace-time efforts of the American Red Cross. The application of the Draft act showed most astounding conditions in relation to the manhood of America. In the first place, of those liable for the draft, 35 per cent. were unfit pnysically. That means 35 per cent., not of the male population, but of that portion of the male population which by reason of the ages represented was the fittest part of the male population.

"What was equally surprising was the fact that most of the physical disabilities were of the preventable class, that is to say they existed or were permitted to develop by reason of ignorance or apathy. An astonishingly large percentage of these young men were illiterate. We must do something about these conditions. Nothing effective or enduring will be done by any Government agency without the keen and understanding support of the people affected.

"The only effective way to stimulate this interest is through an organization composed, like the American Red Cross, of the people themselves. It is for this reason that I think the biggest field for Red Cross work lies in the future and embraces a considerable portion of our own population.

"Insurance company reports show that in this country during the war over ten persons died of influenza for each soldier killed in battle. We lost in the war approximately 70,000 men killed or died of wounds. During the same period 450,000 American children under 5 years of age died, and the majority of them expired of preventable diseases. In the United States between 150,000 and 200,000 persons die annually of tuberculosis. The conditions resulting from venereal diseases are not understood or appreciated by the mass of the people. Venereal disease is more prevalent in this country than any other disease. We have been shutting our eyes to this—ignoring it, because it is unpleasant to contemplate and difficult to remedy. But America and Americans cannot be efficiently developed unless this scourge is recognized and controlled by the popular will. The American Red Cross, which during the war had a membership of 22,000,000 of men and women, constitutes a most efficient agency for the solution of this problem.

"The Red Cross is still engaged, and will for some time continue to be engaged, in the relief of families of soldiers killed in the war. In like manner it will be engaged for some time in the relief of needy soldiers.

"A Force for Better Things."

"With the experience gained in the war, with its tremendous organization and experienced personnel, the Red Cross should constitute a mighty force for better things in the future life of America, and the greatness of its strength will lie in the hearts and minds of the millions of American men and women who constitute it.

"This brings me to the second question, which concerns the identity of the Red Cross leadership. I was interested in this question myself. I found that the men whose brains developed and expanded the war organization of the Red Cross, whose imagination conceived the possibilities of its effort and whose genius directed that effort in the accomplishment of its great results, were leaders in American finance and industry, who modestly did their work without reward and at a great sacrifice of their personal interests.

"Such men as Henry P. Davison, Cornelius M. Bliss, Jr., Eliot Wadsworth, Ethan Allen, Dr. Livingston Farrand and others associated with them must feel a great sense of satisfaction when they contemplate the alleviation of world suffering made possible by their leadership. The real truth, however, is that the people back of the Red Cross are you and I and every one else who joins and gives the great work even a small push forward. The strength of the Red Cross is in its membership, for it is this great membership which maintains it as a living force, as a body that understands suffering and with an intelligence and a spirit that do not tolerate the excuses and delays that so frequently characterise strictly official effort.

"It is to vitalize this characteristic of the Red Cross, to perpetuate the human side of the organization, that is the object of this drive for membership. And so I bespeak for the Red Cross workers during the remainder of the drive the favorable consideration and active participation in membership of all those men and women of America who have an understanding of what this great organization has accomplished and who possess an interest in the extension of its efforts to our own problems of peace."

JENKINS KIDNAPPING UP IN BOTH HOUSES

Representative Gould's Resolution Demands That Carranza Be Called On to Pay Ransom.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Resolutions bearing on the kidnapping of William O. Jenkins, American Consular Agent at Puebla, Mexico, were introduced today in the House and Senate.

One by Representative Gould, Republican, New York, would direct the State Department to take immediate steps to have the Mexican Government reimburse those who paid the ransom to the bandits for the release of Jenkins.

The other, by Senator King, Democrat, Utah, would ask the State Department to report whether the Mexican Government had been requested to reimburse Mr. Jenkins for the amount of the ransom.

Both resolutions were recommended to the committees.

In explanation of his resolution Mr. Gould issued a statement attacking the policy of the State Department in this case. This statement says:

"The Department of State, in open and cynical repudiation of the most sacred obligation of government, to protect the lives, liberty, and property of its citizens, has declared an open season on Americans for bandits and rebels in Mexico. Further, it has even extended thi srepudiation to its own official representatives in Mexico. With official sanction, it has permitted this statement of policy to go forth to the world.

"Thus, if relatives or friends of a representative of the United States Government find it necessary to pay $150,000 to insure his safety while on his official mission in a foreign and friendly country, our Government has no interest in the affair. And, further, if other Americans in a friendly country are kidnapped and held for ransom or killed their Government has no greater interest in their misfortunes than in those of Mexican nationals in Mexico.

"The State of Puebla is one of the most densely settled districts in Mexico, and the City of Puebla, the State capital, from which William O. Jenkins was abducted, is the second largest city in the entire Republic of Mexico. But in the four months next preceding the date of the reply of the Mexican Government which I have quoted from, there were not less than thirty-four outrages and disorders attributed by Mexico City newspapers either to rebels or organized bandits in the State of Puebla alone, and approximately 70 per cent. of these occurred or were perpetrated in the City of Puebla or its immediate environs.

"And in the face of such a record, in the face of its warning to the Mexican Government, and in the face of all national self-respect and decency, the Department of State of the United States now announces that Mexican bandits can kidnap our officials or our law-abiding citizens in Mexico without let or hindrance, or without even arousing the active interest of their own Government."

SHOW ROOSEVELT TROPHIES

American Museum Has Birds Mounted in Ex-President's Youth.

The American Museum of Natural History has put on exhibition a collection of bird and other skins collected at different times by Colonel Theodore Roosevelt and presented to the Museum. There are some highly colored specimens of bird skins which were collected by Colonel Roosevelt on his South American expeditions, and others collected by him in Egypt in the Winter of 1872-3, and which he mounted. Among them are excellently mounted specimens of the spurwing and crocodile bird, which have the habit of entering the mouths of crocodiles in search of food and parasites.

Colonel Roosevelt's old home at Oyster Bay is represented by several bird skins which were collected and prepared by him on various occasions.

There are five bird skins from Oyster Bay which he shot and mounted when he was thirteen years old. These he labeled "Roosevelt Museum," and at the Museum it is pointed out as a proof of the love for naturalistic studies evinced by him at an early age. They show that he had a natural bent and skill for collecting and mounting birds. There is a beautiful specimen of a snow owl collected and mounted by Colonel Roosevelt in 1876.

That Colonel Roosevelt had a genuine love for these feathered creatures is shown by a letter he wrote to Frank Chapman of the Museum in November, 1910, in which he said in part: "I would like to feed the birds around my house this Winter. I suppose crumbs for the sparrows (not English sparrows) are all right. What kind of bones and other things ought I to hang up for the chicadees and other birds?"

NAMING OF TARDIEU A BLOW AT BRIAND

It Is Taken as Effort by Clemenceau to Blast Rival's Hopes of Premiership.

'TIGER' FORCED LE BRUN OUT

Told Him to Quit His Cabinet or Withdraw Support from an Anti-Treaty Candidate.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 7.—The appointment of Captain André Tardieu to a Cabinet post is regarded here as another point for Clemenceau in his duel with Aristide Briand for the control of the succession to the headship of the Cabinet, which will become vacant the day the "Tiger" retires to private life, immediately after the general election. M. Clemenceau, it is believed, is fixed in his determination to quit party politics on that date. Whether he will accept the nomination to succeed President Poincaré at the end of January is still regarded as an open question, but the feeling is growing that he will not. What is generally believed is that he will insist, if possible, on controlling the selection of his successor in such a way that Briand will not be able to get the nomination.

The fact that Clemenceau is in a position to manipulate the elections is an enormous advantage to him. Until yesterday Briand was regarded as the only probable successor to Clemenceau, with Louis Barthou as a bad second, owing to his Clerical tendencies. Tardieu was looked upon as a mere possibility. His entry into the Ministry, however, has given him greatly improved chances, and he is now viewed by many people as a dangerous rival to Briand.

Captain Tardieu's whole career has admirably fitted him sooner or later to take the highest office in the state. His experience in the diplomatic service, his subsequent stay at the Quai d'Orsay, followed by some years' work as foreign editor of The Temps, which in this country means a great deal more than a similar post would in America or England, all combined to give him the reputation of being one of the most authoritative students of foreign policy in France. His successful missions to America in the earlier part of the war, and the fact that he acted as Clemenceau's right-hand man throughout the most difficult days of the Peace Conference, and supported the heaviest burden carried by any member of the French delegation, have marked him out as destined to play a rôle of the first rank, if not the very highest, as soon as the "Tiger" drops the reins.

A well-known allied diplomat in the course of conversation this morning voiced this opinion in a curious but significant manner, by remarking that the succession to Lebrun was the least reward that could be offered Tardieu in view of his work in the conference.

Dramatic Ultimatum to Lebrun.

PARIS, Nov. 7, (Associated Press.)—Captain André Tardieu, who yesterday was appointed Minister of Blockade and Invaded Regions, to succeed Albert Lebrun, who resigned, today assumed the office. He was introduced to the personnel at the Ministry. Addressing the men, Captain Tardieu asked their earnest co-operation, assuring them of his protection against unjust criticism. "The liberated regions must be taken care of promptly," he said.

The appointment of Captain Tardieu to the post vacated by M. Lebrun is meeting with general approval in French political and business circles.

Premier Clemenceau's request, while on his recent visit to Strasbourg, that Lebrun resign his portfolio because he was a candidate for election to the Chamber of Deputies on the same ticket with Deputy Louis Marin, who voted against the Peace Treaty in the Chamber, was most spectacular and unexpected.

Returning from the Kühl Bridge, Premier Clemenceau talked with Albert Claveille, Minister of Public Works, and exchanged good-natured banter with the newspaper men. The party arrived at the Governor's Palace, where delegations of Alsatian young women were gathered. The Premier received bouquets from the women, addressing a compliment to each.

In a lull in the proceedings Minister Lebrun approached the Premier, asking permission to leave the party, as his presence was required at Nancy, where an important political meeting was scheduled for the evening.

"The excuse is good," said the Premier, "but your election list will have to be changed. I note the name of Marin alongside yours. Marin voted against the Peace Treaty, and his name cannot be coupled with that of a representative of the Government. Should Marin refuse to withdraw, I will have to ask you, providing you desire to remain on this list, to resign your portfolio with my Cabinet."

This was said in tones loud enough to be heard by officials and newspaper men in the immediate vicinity. Minister Lebrun appeared crestfallen. He flushed and hesitated for a moment before withdrawing. Yesterday he presented his resignation to Premier Clemenceau.

A statement was issued by Lebrun this morning in which he said he bore malice toward no one and was satisfied to have been a member of the "Cabinet of Victory."

Salesman Kills Himself.

Leaving a note, according to the police, in which he said that he had lived long enough and was tired of life, Louis Lasek, 65 years old, a clothing salesman of 910 Columbus Avenue, shot himself in the right temple while sitting on a bench in Central Park near 106th Street yesterday. The body was taken to the Arsenal Station, where, according to the police, a letter was found addressed to the dead man's brother, Alfred Lasek of 105 East Seventeenth Street, in which the writer told of his intention to take his life.

Storm Drives Air Mail Down.

Stevens, aero mail pilot, and Eddie Waters, mechanician, on the Cleveland to New York route, were driven from their course today, and, running out of lubricating oil, made a safe landing at the Sullivan County Fair Grounds here at nightfall. They will start for Belmont Park tomorrow morning.

CANCELS ORDERS FOR 58 VESSELS

Shipping Board Cut Affects Hog Island and Submarine Boat Corporation.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—The Emergency Fleet Corporation has canceled contracts with the American International Shipbuilding Corporation for twenty-three troop and cargo ships which were to have been built at Hog Island.

Notice of cancellation was received today by the shipbuilding officials. The contracts had been suspended earlier in the year. It was originally planned to build seventy ships of this type at Hog Island. On March 18 the contracts for thirty-five of them were canceled and the contracts for the other thirty-five were suspended.

Later permission was given to proceed with the construction of twelve. According to P. S. Tyce, staff assistant of J. L. Ackerson, Vice President and General Manager of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the contracts were canceled after consideration of the costs and of the requirements of the Shipping Board. Class B fabricated cargo-troop ships were not advantageous for peace time commerce.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—It was stated at the Shipping Board tonight that the cancellation of contracts for troop and cargo ships at Hog Island was in line with the policy of readjustment determined upon after a survey of the shipping program. Since the middle of August, it was stated, the board has suspended work on a total of 207 ships. Of this number thirty-two were at the Newark yard of the Submarine Boat Corporation and twenty-three were at Hog Island. Of the contracts canceled at the Newark yard no keels had been laid. The contracts represented ships which had been desired by the Government during the war, but which it was felt were not required in rounding out the program now contemplated for Government account.

Henry R. Carse, head of the Submarine Boat Corporation could say no more yesterday than that he had received word from the United States Shipping Board to suspend construction on the thirty-two fabricated steel ships which were part of a contract made with the Shipping Board for a total of 150 vessels.

The amount of money involved in the thirty-two ships is estimated to be in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 a ship, or $32,000,000. The plant furnishes employment for 11,000 and has a weekly payroll aggregating $300,000.

The yard is owned by the Shipping Board and the materials which were to be used in building the canceled vessels are also the property of the board.

It is understood that before there had been any intimation by the Shipping Board of a cancellation of orders on such a broad scale, managers of many of the yards had had informal talks with representatives of the Emergency Fleet Corporation regarding the disposition of the properties when the Government shipbuilding program had been completed. It is understood that in some instances the managers were planning to finance a number of the yards as private enterprises.

Just how far private business will go toward solving the problem by providing work for the yards is a question of the future, according to local shipping men who were inclined yesterday to criticise the suspension order of the Shipping Board. They assert that as good merchant tonnage can be built in these American yards at $180 a ton as can be built anywhere and say that such splendid organizations should not be allowed to disintegrate.

SWANN BLAMES MANAGERS.

District Attorney Says Theatre Men Are Responsible for Speculating.

William A. Brady's statement on behalf of the Theatrical Producing Managers' Association, to the effect that the "intolerable situation of illegal ticket speculation had resulted from failure of the District Attorney to enforce the anti-speculating ordinance," was answered by Mr. Swann yesterday with the assertion that the theatrical managers themselves were largely responsible for lack of enforcement. The District Attorney said:

"The regulation of ticket speculation is up to the managers. If the producers and theatre managers would use due diligence tickets would not find their way into the hands of speculators."

Mr. Swann pointed out that he had drafted and caused the ordinance to be enacted by the Aldermen only after due consultation with the managers and their approval of it obtained. Mr. Brady was quoted as saying that several prominent managers had written to the District Attorney making specific charges of violation of the law. Mr. Swann had Assistant District Attorney Quinn investigate this feature of the case, who reported as follows:

"The letters purporting to give specific charges of overcharging, which William A. Brady referred to in his statement, have never been received at the District Attorney's Office. Several complaints from Florenz Ziegfeld and Mark Luescher, manager of the Hippodrome, were received and were promptly attended to, resulting in the arrest of several speculators.

Mr. Swann referred to the custom of speculators of underwriting a production for months in advance, often at a premium over the regular price of the tickets, leaving the public absolutely in the hands of speculators. This custom, asserted the District Attorney, frequently requires speculators to underwrite failures and of a necessity they are compelled to make up these losses by overcharges on successful plays.

"The District Attorney promises a vigorous prosecution of illegal ticket speculators—those who over-charge the 50-cent margin permitted under the ordinance, and will insist upon a prison sentence in future convictions," said Mr. Swann.

Mr. Swann announced that he had called a conference with the members of the Producing Managers' Association at his office on Tuesday afternoon.

Aldermen-Elect Colne Seriously Ill.

Republican Alderman-elect William W. Colne is seriously ill at his home, 11 Irving Place, Brooklyn. He is suffering from a recurrence of an attack of acute indigestion. He had previously recovered sufficiently for him to carry on his election campaign, and it is believed the strain of the contest brought about his present illness. Two years ago he was declared elected by one vote to the office he won last Tuesday, but a recount gave it to Alderman Dempsey, the candidate he has just defeated.

COLUMBIA TO TEACH DUTIES OF CITIZENS

Development of Better Americanism Purpose of Thirty-one New Courses.

A CHECK FOR BOLSHEVISM

Patriotic Instruction It Is Hoped Will Counteract Growth of Radical Movements Here.

College courses designed to promote higher citizenship and to develop better Americanism for both native born and immigrants are being given as a group this year for the first time in the School of Education, Columbia University. The courses are thirty-one in number, besides a great variety of related courses in many fields, and range from studies of the general principles of citizenship to the teaching of how to invest and to borrow money.

The aim of the courses as set forth in an announcement of the university is as follows:

"It is evident that education for citizenship is generally regarded as one of the most important problems confronting American schools today. Committees and commissions and conventions are at work in all parts of the country to study Americanization, to prepare or revise courses of study in history, civics, and related fields, to promote patriotism, and to plan various activities both in and out of schools that will develop civic spirit and efficiency.

The teacher, supervisor or administrator who has had good professional training of a general character is unequal to cope with this difficult problem. It is necessary to make some special study of the equipment needed by the efficient citizen—in knowledge, habits and mental attitudes; of the extent to which this equipment can be provided, and how to provide it. Essential to such special studies is an adequate knowledge of the conditions and problems that confront the citizen; the nature of our social and political institutions and practices, the peculiar problems of democracy, the special ideals and traits of the American people, and the like."

By teaching the precepts of better citizenship and by laying emphasis on American history, traditions, ideals and national characteristics, the courses, it is hoped, will act as a check on Bolshevism and other radical movements. Stress will be laid on the general principles of good civic spirit and patriotism, as well as on the practical difficulties that confront both the native American and the immigrant.

Among the latter problems that of savings and investment is prominently treated in the instruction being given at Columbia. An entire course is devoted to this question, the sub-divisions including thrift in the schools, a study of the United States Government campaign for war savings and thrift, the organization of war savings clubs, the several issues of Liberty bonds, the various agencies for promoting thrift such as the savings bank, postal savings, building and loan associations; types of investments, loan societies, the avoidance of loan sharks, and various forms of insurance and annuities.

The principles and practices of scouting and scoutcraft are being taught in a course that is given in co-operation with the national councils of both the Boy Scouts and the Girl Scouts. This course, the announcement says, will give consideration to the aims and policies of both these organizations and to what these movements are doing and can do in training boys and girls to meet effectively present and future local and national needs. Clubcraft is taught in another course.

Another class in "Education for Citizenship" that is being taught by Professor Gambrill deals with the kind of citizenship that is desirable and with a survey of the economic, social, and political problems that confront the American citizen. A junior class in the Horace Mann High School gives what is called illustrative lessons in citizenship, including materials and methods of instruction in citizenship.

America's educational work in the Philippines is the subject matter of another course, which also includes such international topics as the emergence of Japan as a first-class power through education, the bearing of education on the developing nationalism in China, the cultural rehabilitation in the Balkans, in the Near East, and in certain colonial possessions of European powers. The problems of modern educational experience form the general basis of the course.

A study in Americanization through language is offered in a course of English for foreigners which deals with the more evident language difficulties of foreigners in our day and evening schools and in industry. Sex education and social hygiene are given in a class on biology in education.

TO DRILL AT COLUMBIA.

800 Students Will Begin Military Work Tomorrow.

Eight hundred Columbia students whose ages bring them within the provisions of the Slater law will begin biweekly drills tomorrow afternoon at the 22d Regiment Armory, Fort Washington Avenue and 168th Street, in accordance with orders issued yesterday by Major J. Wesley Lyon of the New York State Training Commission. State instructors will be in charge.

The students, all of whom are between the ages of sixteen and nineteen, will be divided into six companies, A to F, and will drill twice a week, on Mondays and Tuesdays, until further orders. Notice has been sent to each student ordering him to report at the armory tomorrow afternoon, unless he can show cause for exemption. This will be granted only in exceptional cases, where a student is taking courses in the evening or is carrying an exceptionally heavy schedule of studies.

The only stated cause of exemption mentioned in Major Lyon's order will affect students who are enrolled in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at Columbia, which under the supervision of Lieut.-Col. A. R. Edwards is offering courses in both the theoretical and the practical side of military training. Enrollment for this instruction will be accepted by the State commission in lieu of the drill required under the Slater law.

New York University and City College will be practically unaffected by the enforcement of the law. Both of these institutions already have compulsory drill for freshmen and sophomores under the direction of officers of the regular army. At Fordham, where there is no military organization of any kind, the Slater law drills will probably be on the same model as those at Columbia.

The National Co-operative Association, with headquarters in Chicago, will co-operate with the Farmers' National Council in holding the conference.

2 UNHURT IN AIRPLANE FALL

Former Army Pilot and Passenger in Crash at Springfield.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 8.—An airplane piloted by Paton MacGillvary, a former army aviator, and with Harold C. Clifford of Brookline as a passenger, crashed to the ground while making a landing here this afternoon. Though both occupants were taken to a hospital, neither was seriously injured.

The accident was due, it is said, to the failure of the engine to function as the plane was coming out of a nose dive from a height of about 1,000 feet. MacGillvary succeeded in partly flattening the plane before it struck. The plane is one of the three that has been making flights here.

Hague Fails to End Strike.

Mayor Hague and other Jersey City officials have sought unsuccessfully for two days to settle the strike of 1,800 meat handlers and laborers at the plants of Swift & Co. and Armour & Co. in that city. The men struck Oct. 14 for 60 cents an hour, time and a half for overtime, and the recognition of their union. The companies refuse to recognize the union and have refused to increase wages pending a court decision in the settlement of a strike in Chicago.

MEXICAN TRAINMEN TO QUIT.

Americans Are Reported to be Stirring Up a General Strike.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Nov. 8.—Union railway employes of the Mexican National Lines at Aguascalientes have announced their intention of walking out today in sympathy with striking cotton mill employes in the State of Vera Cruz, according to information received here.

Labor agents believed to have come from the United States are said to be active at Torreon and Monterey in stirring up a general strike, dispatches from Mexico City announce.

Aguascalientes is one of the main railway centres in Mexico.

Miners' Union Fleeced Out of $1,000

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 8.—The local miners' union at McRoberts, Ky., was penniless today. It was fleeced out of $1,000 yesterday by a man who passed as a Government agent sent to adjust differences between miners and operators.

15 Are Arrested in Buffalo Raid.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 8.—Fifteen persons were arrested here early today by Federal operatives in connection with the country-wide raid on radical and I. W. W. headquarters. Two of the prisoners were brought from Lackawanna.

An Educational Value, Too.

Youth is a formative period. Every moment should be full of useful experience. The ending of school should be the beginning of further education.

To succeed, organizations—like individuals—must be thorough. An institution gets its character and effectiveness from its individual members. Industrial executives are reminded by the times that they must again be teachers and leaders. In this store we are trying to fulfill that obligation.

Even though an employment here may be looked upon as temporary, our methods should make women better home makers, particularly as we try to develop personality and teach the value of method and system.

Think of this, and you or those in whom you are interested may decide to come with us.

RATIFY AT ONCE, BUSINESS MEN URGE

Western Firms Appeal to Customers to Impress Need for Action on Senators.

SEND LETTERS BROADCAST

Stabilization of World's Trade Awaits Decision at Washington, They Declare.

In support of its contention that business men of the country favor immediate ratification of the Peace Treaty, the New York County Committee of the League to Enforce Peace yesterday made public letters mailed broadcast over the country by the Simmons Hardware Company of St. Louis and the John V. Farwell Company of Chicago. Both letters urged immediate action by the Senate.

"We make it a rule never to mix politics with business," wrote Wallace D. Simmons to the 40,000 customers of the Simmons Hardware Company. "In harmony with this policy, we have refrained from saying anything to you with reference to the Peace Treaty or the League of Nations, because there has been introduced into the question partisanship and politics in a manner that seems to us to have been harmful to the interests of all our people and detrimental to that progress which should have begun soon after the signing of the armistice.

"It seems to us now that politics has been practically eliminated by the action of the Senate in voting down each and every proposed amendment, leaving it definitely determined that the treaty will be confirmed without amendments and without reservations of a type calculated to have an effect similar to that of amendments. Therefore, the important question before the people is, 'When will final action be taken?'

"In that question is involved a great deal of vital moment, not only to all the people of the United States but to all other peoples who desire to cooperate with us in a universal effort to put the world back upon a sound and progressive peace basis.

"In the broadest and most liberal sense it is now purely a business proposition—a question of intelligent action designed to promote the most important business which we have before us—the business of getting squarely on our feet and faced forward.

"The delay in reaching a definite conclusion as to what to do has been most harmful and expensive. It may have been worth while because of the importance of taking action only after most thorough consideration, but, now that the decision has been practically made, further delay would be most unnecessarily wasteful and hence inexcusable.

"There can be no doubt that this delay is affecting unfavorably the labor situation and the industrial situation here and in Europe. It is interfering with the establishing of our export trade relations, upon which must depend the extent to which our people will have steady employment in the future. It is interfering most harmfully with foreign credits and rates of exchange, which have a more direct effect upon the cost of living than the people generally realize."

The letter sent out by the John V. Farwell Company was of similar tenor. It was sent out to 20,000 customers. A notation by the League to Enforce Peace was that Mr. Farwell was a Republican.

"American business, large and small, is being handicapped by the delay," it said. "The time has come for the ninety-six Senators to get together, act, get the treaty out of the way at this session, and then concentrate on the solution of vital domestic problems.

"Business men know that delay in getting the peace treaty into effective operation is preventing stabilization of European Government and trade; that such delay, by preventing the laboring classes from getting to work, is aiding the forces of extreme radicalism everywhere, and that prolonged delay will depress all lines of American business and prevent the early solution of the problem of exports, foreign credits, and exchange."

A joint letter urging immediate action was written by publishers of the four daily newspapers in Des Moines, Iowa, three of them Republican in politics and one independent.

TO OBSERVE SAILORS' DAY.

There Will Be Special Services in Nearly All City's Churches Today.

The American Seamen's Friend Society announced yesterday that the churches of this city have almost without exception promised the observance in their churches today of Sailors' Day. This general observance has been brought about by the co-operation of the fifteen organizations belonging to the Joint Conference of the Seamen's Societies of the Port of New York.

Many of the Consuls General, men and women interested in the work of the seamen's organizations, and several hundred sailors will attend special service tonight at the First Presbyterian Church, University Place and Tenth Street. The Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick will preach the sermon. The Executive Committee in charge of the observance of Sailors' Day has the following members: James Yereance, George W. Cartier, Archibald R. Mansfield, Charles Cedarholm, George S. Webster.

Five Are Injured and One Is Taken to a Hospital.

Special to The New York Times.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Nov. 8.—Mrs. Frank Moran is at the St. Francis Hospital here suffering from injuries received in an automobile accident on Friday night on the State road in Greenville. She will recover. She was with an auto party in a car owned and driven by Corporal W. E. Tilson of the Canadian Mounted Police. With her were her sister, Miss Phyllis Moller, Miss Margarette Burnside of Monticello, and C. P. Darlington Lippincott of Philadelphia.

The car lost a wheel at a turn and upset. Every one of the party was somewhat injured.

MAY SEIZE MILK SUPPLY.

Copeland to Take Step, If Necessary, to Keep Price Down.

Health Commissioner Copeland, Chairman of the Governor's Fair Milk Price Committee, said yesterday that if necessary he would exercise his police power and commandeer the milk supply to keep the price within reach of the average consumer.

At the committee's hearing tomorrow Dr. Copeland expects the distributers to have ready some plan by which the price of milk immediately may be reduced.

Fly from Morocco to Tunis.

TUNIS, Nov. 7.—Two military aviators, Lieutenant Patanchan and Major Cheutin, have arrived at Tunis by airplane from Rabat, Morocco. The flight, which is stated to have been made without a stop, covered a distance of more than 1,200 miles.

SWEEP IN SENATE FOR RESERVATION

the entire day in the Senate. Mr. Thomas, who voted against it, offered, early in the day, an amendment to strike out the clause providing for a concurrent resolution of Congress on withdrawal, saying that he did not feel that the President ought to be estopped from exercising the right of assent or veto.

In the debate on the Thomas amendment, Senator Hitchcock, while opposing it, argued that Congress would not sacrifice the privilege of having the last say as to withdrawal, if the President happened to veto any resolution to that end, since Congress might override the President's veto.

This brought Senator Lenroot of Wisconsin to his feet with a retort that there was slim prospect of the Administration forces voting to override a Presidential veto.

"At this very moment we have the spectacle, boasted of openly by some," said Mr. Lenroot, "that there are forty faithful Democrats here who are willing to surrender their own convictions and their own judgment and are waiting to find out what the President of the United States wants done about the reservations in this treaty and are then willing to vote however he asks them to vote.

"Then talk about passing a withdrawal resolution over the veto of the President! I do not want the time to come when forty faithful Republicans, if there should be a Republican President who wants to keep us in the League, against the will of the people, can keep us there."

"I do not know," retorted Senator Hitchcock, "upon what authority the Senator from Wisconsin makes such a reckless and utterly unfounded statement as that forty Democrats are waiting upon the will of the President in casting their votes. It would be just as much justified if I should say that forty-nine Republicans on the other side are taking the will of the Republican leader. I have made no statement of that sort and nobody has.

"We allow a reasonable suspicion that Senators on the other side are standing by their own opinions and by their own will, and the Senator from Wisconsin ought to be fair enough and generous enough to Senators on this side of the aisle to assume that if Senators on that side can combine to stand for a certain principle Senators on this side of the aisle can do it without doing it at the dictation of any man, either the President or anybody else."

"Does the Senator from Nebraska," demanded Senator Lenroot, "say that there are not a very large number of Senators—I only took the number forty roughly—upon that side who are ready to combine with him in doing whatever the President of the United States asks them to do in reference to the treaty?"

"I deny it," declared Senator Hitchcock.

"I am very glad to hear it," remarked Senator Lenroot.

"That issue was not raised and it will not be raised," added Senator Hitchcock.

Gore Amendment Voted Down.

Senator Gore, at this juncture, moved to amend the amendment offered by Senator Thomas, so as to provide that withdrawal might be made either through joint or concurrent resolution of Congress and with the assent of the President.

Upon this Senator Thomas withdrew his amendment and that of Senator Gore came to a vote. It was defeated by 68 to 18. Those voting in favor of it were Senators Borah, Calder, France, Jones, of Washington; Keyes, La Follette, Lenroot, and Moses, Republicans, and Chamberlain, Gore, Henderson, Kendrick, King, Kirby, McKellar, Reed, Thomas, and Walsh of Massachusetts, Democrats.

Next, Senator Nelson offered an amendment to include the provision for a joint resolution in the reservation, this being voted down by 45 to 39. In urging his amendment, Senator Nelson declared that while the President "had made grave mistakes during his administration," and had "erred in not taking Congress into his confidence in the treaty negotiations at Paris," still he did not like to see the Senate "affront the President while he was on his sick bed."

"The President, I believe, made a serious mistake when he yielded to the railroad employes three years ago," said Senator Nelson. "Now he is reaping the whirlwind that he sowed at that time, in the unfair demands of labor. The President erred, too, in insisting that none but Democrats be in his confidence in making the treaty at Paris. He would have had smoother sailing had he asked the counsel of Republicans as well. But he did not do it.

"But, even with the mistakes of the President there is no reason why Congress should attempt to cut him off in the exercise of the veto power in any action Congress may take relating to this treaty. To do it would be to affront the President while he is on his sick bed. For God's sake, let us be fair with him."

Says Republican Will Succeed Wilson.

Senator Lodge replied that President Wilson undoubtedly would not be the occupant of the White House after March 4, 1921, and asserted that whatever restrictions the Senate now saw fit to make as to executive authority in connection with the withdrawal would affect a Republican incumbent.

"I fail to see why the President should have any veto power over a decree of Congress respecting the withdrawal of the United States from the League of Nations," said Mr. Lodge. "This provision for a concurrent resolution does not in any way reflect upon the President."

Senator Lodge said that nearly all the Democrats in voting against the Gore amendment had put themselves against giving the President authority to act on a resolution of withdrawal.

Senator McCumber contended that the Senate in circumscribing the veto power over a resolution of withdrawal sought to take away a prerogative that the President had as to nearly every matter of importance legislated on by Congress.

After the Nelson amendment had been defeated, Senator Walsh, Democrat of Montana, offered one precisely like that proposed by Senator Thomas earlier in the day, to strike out the clause pertaining to a concurrent resolution. This was voted down by 48 to 37.

Next Senator King of Utah put in an amendment to the pending reservation to provide that any nation withdrawing from the League of Nations might be the sole judge as to whether its obligations had been fulfilled. Senator Lodge opposed this amendment on the ground that the United States could not assume to dictate to other nations.

"The whole purpose of the committee reservations," said Senator Lodge, "is to protect the independent action of the United States, while not mixing in the affairs of other nations."

The King amendment was voted down, 52 to 30, after which the minority abandoned its effort to defeat the majority reservation.

The committee reservation on Article X., concerning the guarantee of political independence and territorial integrity of nations in the League, is to come up on Monday.

FEAR ILLUSORY ROLE BY AMERICA IN LEAGUE

Paris Sees in the Senate's Course a Policy of All to Gain, Nothing to Lose.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The entire Paris press today takes a very gloomy view of the fate of the treaty at Washington. The dispatches from the American capital, while differing a good deal on the details of yesterday's developments, uniformly reach the conclusion that some reservations are going to be adopted or the treaty defeated.

Paris editors have a good deal to say about the situation, and some take the trouble to relieve their feelings about the United States. Their general attitude is that if the proposed reservations are adopted America will be a sort of fifth wheel to the machinery established in the peace treaty, including the League of Nations, and that, therefore, in afterwar adjustments America will be a hindrance rather than a help to Europe in working out its salvation.

In other words, Frenchmen make it clear that they intend that it shall be Europe and not America which will shape affairs in Europe in the near future if America tries to come into the international association on the basis of all to gain and nothing to lose, as they look at it.

After printing a dispatch quoting Senator Hitchcock as saying that the Democrats in the Senate would reject the treaty rather than accept the reservations for which the Republicans claim sufficient votes, Le Matin says today editorially:

"Without repeating the details of the reservations which we published a few days ago, it would not be amiss to emphasize that if they were voted, the collaboration of America in the execution of the treaty would be only illusory. The United States would not undertake any of the duties which the other powers have assumed. It could withdraw from the League of Nations by a simple vote of Congress. It would intervene to guarantee the territorial integrity of the powers by the side of which it has fought only after a parliamentary discussion, and it would be in each particular case for Congress to decide. America would not accept any mandate for the administration of any territory.

"Congress would reserve to itself the right to name the delegates to the League of Nations and then in turn would even reserve the right to increase American armaments without the consent of the League. In a word, the United States would not participate in the co-operation of the Allies for the enforcement of the treaty on the same footing with the other powers, for its participation would depend at all times upon political circumstances and the disposition of Congress.

"Unless in the attitude of the two parties there is a good deal of bluff the situation is very serious, and up to the last moment the attitude of the United States will justify great anxiety."

ALBANIANS DESPAIR OF THEIR FUTURE

Premier Turkan Pasha Voices His Countrymen's Disappointment in President Wilson.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—Through the corridors of the Peace Conference a forlorn old man may be seen now and then walking with shoulders bowed, as if bent by a load carried for a long time. Once he was the associate and friend of Czar and Emperor. In those days lackeys bowed and scraped when he came near, and royal gates swung open for him. But it is different now. He represents merely a small nation—a small nation caught between the ambitions of larger nations, a pawn in the big game, a little weight in the balance. So nobody pays much attention to him.

This old man is Turkan Pasha, sometime Ambassador of Turkey, in what was then St. Petersburg, where he was an intimate of Czar Nicholas, and before that Turkish Minister in Vienna, where he went after service in Madrid. He is now Premier of Albania, and as he walks in front of the closed door of the Peace Conference he peddles his fading hopes of that section of the Balkans which thought it was a small nation.

As he speaks in diplomatic language one might read in his shrewd old eyes some fervid opinions of the new diplomacy which has come to the world and his regrets of the passing of the old diplomacy which, whatever its faults, got results of a kind. It is Albania's complaint that it has got no results from the Peace Conference.

Turkan Pasha invited me to luncheon the other day, and I went. We talked and talked. As if of set purpose at regular intervals he expressed in studied sentences his high regard for America; but these compliments merely punctuated his complaints about how Albania had been treated. He seemed especially to resent President Wilson's agreement that in the settlement of the Adriatic question Italy should have a mandate for Albania. He made it clear that of all nations in the world the Albanians disliked the Italians. He said they preferred an American mandate, but if that could not be, they would like to have some other mandatary than Italy.

Now the Albanian settlement proposed by Wilson has gone into the Conference's well-filled waste basket. It now appears that the Conference is going to adjourn without settling the Fiume problem, and that means without settling the whole Adriatic question. It is going to be left, in all probability, to the Foreign Offices of the different powers, and what Turkan Pasha wants to find out is what will happen to Albania in the meantime. Italian and Greek troops are occupying the country now, and he wants to know if they are to stay there, and under what terms. He appears to be getting little satisfaction.

The Albanians are very despondent about the situation. They were counting on America to look out for them, but that faith has been shaken. They do not expect the French Foreign Office to stand in Italy's way if Italy wants to keep troops in Albania. They have no assurances from the British Foreign Office. As Turkan Pasha explained, Albania needs some powerful nation to play the big brother, but she wants to have something to do with the selection of that protector. Nobody seems to consult her.

"Why don't you take it up with the League of Nations?" I asked him.

"I had forgotten about that," he replied.

BRAZILIAN HOUSE FOR TREATY

Deputies Approve It Without Amendment—Senate to Act.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 7.—The Chamber of Deputies this afternoon approved the Versailles Peace Treaty without discussion or amendment. The treaty will now go to the Senate. Prompt action on the treaty was taken at the request of Deputy de Campos of the Commission of Diplomacy, who explained the various sections of the document.

Before the vote was taken Deputy Joaquin Czorio paid a glowing tribute to the work of President Wilson at the Peace Conference, characterizing him as the world's leader of human progress.

Czechs Ratify Peace Treaties.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 8.—A semi-official message reaching here from Prague announces that the Czechoslovak National Assembly yesterday adopted both the Versailles and St. Germain Peace Treaties.

GERMAN OFFICIALS JAIL 60 EXTREMIST LEADERS

Government Forces Easily Break Up Attempts to Celebrate Russia's Red Anniversary.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Sixty Independent Socialist and Communist leaders in Berlin were arrested in connection with the attempt to celebrate the anniversary of the Russian Red revolution, according to news in the Berlin papers telegraphed to this city. Other arrests will follow. The most prominent leaders, it is stated, are in hiding.

Processions which the radical element attempted to organise were broken up by the Government forces without trouble. Thirty-six individuals who refused to obey the orders to disperse were taken to the police station.

BERLIN, Nov. 7. (Associated Press.)—German Bolsheviki, who planned to observe the anniversary of Lenin's victory over Kerensky, found their ardor considerably dampened today both through the weather conditions and the thoughtfulness of Gustav Noske, Minister of Defense.

Snow-covered stretches of barbed wire barred the approach to Wilhelmstrasse, while a moderate sprinkling of Noske Guards walked leisurely up and down before the various Government buildings. Special troop detachments were also assigned to Police Headquarters and the main telegraph office. These were the only outward indications that the Government was prepared to meet the Communist demonstrations.

The Communists made a feeble attempt to conduct open-air meetings in various outlying sections of the city, but were quickly dispersed by troops.

After the fiasco suffered by the red labor leaders, who hoped to stampede the Berlin workers into a general strike during this week-end, there was no inclination on the part of the workers outside of those in the metal industries to make this a labor holiday. Street life up to 4 o'clock this afternoon was normal.

In Munich the workers will observe the anniversary by a general labor holiday Saturday. All the various industries will remain idle, but the employers have notified the workers that their wages will be deducted for the day's layoff.

Communists' attempts to celebrate in other cities in Germany ended in complete failure. In Hamburg Henrich Lauffenberg, a Comunist editor, was arrested for inciting to riot.

AMERICAN LEGION DELEGATES GATHER

ROOSEVELT REFUSES OFFICE

C. W. Wickersham Says Legion Must Stand for Law and Order and Against Bolshevism.

Special to The New York Times.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 8.—The American Legion, which opens its formal sessions here Monday, has taken possession of Minneapolis. The advance guard, including national officers, State Chairmen and Secretaries, is here. Every train is now bringing State delegations. Working committees have been named and everything is in readiness for the convention.

Theodore Roosevelt and C. W. Wickersham, Acting Chairman of the New York delegation, arrived this morning and attended the sessions of the caucus committees appointed at Paris and St. Louis.

Mr. Roosevelt again asserted that he would not be a candidate for office. Some of the delegations were ready to pledge him support, not having seen his New York announcement of last Wednesday.

"When I say 'no' I mean 'no,'" he said, when asked if it were not possible that he would be drafted for an office against his wish.

There is evidence that there will be a spirited contest between the East and the West on the subject of bonuses for soldiers. Many of the Eastern delegations have not considered this question. The sentiment in the West seems to be for a bonus from the Federal Government. Royal C. Johnson, Congressman from South Dakota, is a strong supporter of the bonus movement.

The committee representing the men selected by the Paris and St. Louis meetings and the American Legion to perfect arrangements for the national organization met and listened to the report of Eric Fisher Wood covering the operations of national headquarters since the St. Louis caucus.

Only six States lacked representation by delegates at the joint session of the advance delegation yesterday.

The delegation Chairmen will recommend that each convention committee consist of one delegate from each State, selected by that State in any manner it desires; that each committee elect its own Chairman and Secretary, and that each committee report direct to the convention, purely in an advisory capacity, the convention being free to accept, reject, or modify any committee recommendations.

No committee on nominations will be suggested to the convention and it is probable that all nominations will be made from the floor.

The Resolutions Committee will be relieved of considerable work by the appointment of separate committees to deal with war risk insurance, beneficial legislation, military policy, and anti-American propaganda if the convention adopts the program recommended. The War Risk Insurance Committee will be asked to suggest how former service men may receive the most efficient assistance from the legion and to recommend what improvements in legislation and administration, if any, should be urged on the Government.

The beneficial legislation committee will handle the problems of vocational training, care of disabled soldiers, land and home aid, industrial and individual loans, compensation, national bonds, etc.

The anti-American Propaganda Committee will be asked to recommend what action, if any, should be taken by the legion to combat at all times all anti-American propaganda.

A dozen candidates for Commander in Chief of the legion were in sight today, while five cities are seeking to become national headquarters, and at least three are after the next national convention.

In addition to Henry X. Lindsay, the present National Chairman, those being boomed for head of the order are Milton J. Foreman, Chicago; W. J. Donovan, Buffalo, N. Y.; Dow V. Walker, Oregon; Roy Hoffman, Oklahoma; Eric Fisher Wood, Philadelphia, the present National Secretary; E. Lester Jones, Washington, D. C.; Edward F. Logan, Massachusetts; Sergeant Jack Sullivan of Seattle, and Colonel George E. Leach, Minneapolis.

New York delegates say the needs of disabled service men are first in their minds. C. W. Wickersham, Chairman of the New York delegation, in making this plain, said:

"What we want is to start the legion right. We are very earnest about it. The country expects a great deal of the legion, and we hope it is not to be disappointed. The legion is not a selfish organization. Our first thought is what is best for America, and we hope that any issue before the convention will be determined on the single question of 100 per cent. Americanism. We stand for law and order against Bolshevism, and against any group of men whose ideals are those of the red flag. We are anxious, first of all, in considering the welfare of the men who have been in the service, that disabled and helpless ones be given liberal treatment, and not a bare existence, such as the present allowance provides."

FEWER BIRTHS HERE.

They Fall Off 8,576 in the First Eight Months of the Year.

In a review of the first eight months of the year Health Commissioner Royal S. Copeland called attention yesterday to the fact that there has been a falling off both in births and marriages in this city. The birth rate has been considerably lower. During the first eight months of this year there were 86,380 births, as against 94,956 for the corresponding period of 1918, a reduction of 8,576 births.

The report shows a reduction in the number of marriages, but it was slight and, Dr. Copeland said, not unexpected under existing conditions. This, however, he said, would not altogether account for the marked falling off in the birth rate. During the first eight months of 1918 37,821 marriages were reported, against 37,615 this year.

"The reduction in births may be explained on the ground of restricted immigration, for the rate among our foreign population has always been higher than that of the native born," said Dr. Copeland. "Fewer marriages because of economic conditions, and for the same reason fewer births in families already established, must be taken into consideration. Another reason was the absence of our young men through the emergency of war; they did not return in large numbers until the Spring of the year.

"In considering these fallings off one must also consider that large numbers of women have entered into industrial and professional pursuits which place them in a position of financial independence. However, it is likely that in consequence of the return of the soldiers to their homes the birth rate of 1920 will more nearly approach peace times. Still, it must be remembered that unless a reduction in the cost of living is brought about the birth rate in New York is apt to continue below normal for some time."

Kentucky Drys See 10,000 Majority.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 8.—With a dry majority of 7,797 showing on the face of complete unofficial returns from 99 of the 120 counties of the State, prohibitionists in Kentucky, chiefly the Anti-Saloon League, were jubilant today over their apparent victory. They declared that when the remaining twenty-one counties are neard from the dry majority would go beyond 10,000.

BOTANICAL GARDENS GIFT HOUSE OPENED

New Central Display Building Presented by Daniel and Murry Guggenheim.

ERECTION COST $100,000

Plants from Foreign Countries Will Be Exhibited in Greenhouse and Adjoining Orchid House.

There was formally opened at the New York Botanical Gardens yesterday a new Central Display Greenhouse, the gift of Daniel, and Murry Guggenheim, erected at a cost of $100,000. The gift includes, besides the main house, an adjoining orchid house. The main building is approximately 140 feet long, forty-five feet wide and thirty-five feet high.

Among its new features is the glass, which is frosted, thus doing away with the use of screens, previously considered necessary in glasshouses, although more or less of a disfigurement, as they become quickly defaced. The new building has an open concrete floored centre, where lectures are to be given, a new feature in botanical educational work.

The new central display house will contain plants from South Africa, the southern part of Japan, from South America and from some of the Southern States in this country. A special exhibition of plants and flowers was shown in the new greenhouse yesterday. Mrs. Payne Whitney was one of the largest exhibitors, showing chrysanthemums, carnations, and begonias. The Horticultural Society of New York will hold a large flower show today and tomorrow in the new greenhouse, which is now open to the public, it is on the eastern end of the grounds, near the Allerton Avenue subway station, and will aid in distributing the crowds visiting the gardens, the other group of greenhouses being at the western end of the grounds.

W. Gilman Thompson, President of the Board of Directors of the garden, opened the exercises yesterday and told of the educational work of the garden, a part of which will now be done in the new building. The gift of the greenhouse, he said, with the exception of one by Mrs. Russell Sage, was the largest ever made to the garden.

Dr. D. T. MacDougal, Director of Botanical Research, Carnegie Institution of Washington, formerly Assistant Director of the Botanical Garden, was a speaker. He told of an important discovery in regard to the growth of plants which has been announced only within the last few weeks.

This is that the growth of the plants is made in the young cells into which the sugar in the leaves and other green parts of the plants is diffused, and becomes mucilage, with an enormous affinity for water. The cells, by absorbing this water, increase their bulk from forty to fifty times, which is expressed in the growth of the plants. Dr. MacDougal said that glass houses were devices for creating climates, that this new building of the garden was the most splendid of the many he had seen, and that it would play an important part in the work of the garden.

A tablet at the entrance to the greenhouse bears the names of the donors. It was first shown at an informal opening of the greenhouse some weeks ago, before it had been occupied.

RITCHIE WINS BY 165.

Defeats Nice for Maryland Governorship by Small Plurality.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 8.—Albert C. Ritchie, State Attorney General, Democrat, was elected Governor of Maryland at last Tuesday's election by a plurality of 165 over Harry W. Nice, Republican, according to the complete official returns, the canvass of which was finished today.

It was the closest Gubernatorial election ever held in this State.

PRIEST SPOTTED WOMAN SPY

And a Private Became an Officer for Confirming His Suspicions.

This is a belated war story of the capture of a German woman spy and how an American soldier went out as a private and returned as a Captain. It was told by the Rev. Father Victor Egas, now stationed in the Los Angeles Diocese, and during the war a Catholic Chaplain serving in France. It was really the priest whose suspicions were first aroused against the woman and who started the events that led to her capture.

The priest was serving with the 91st Division at Gondrecourt when the woman put in an appearance. He said she was tall, distinguished looking, and spoke excellent English. "Will you assist an American woman from Minnesota to help our boys in the front lines?" was her soft-spoken request to the priest.

Her request was unusual and her appearance at such an advanced point, for Gondrecourt was then under the enemy's shellfire, led Father Egas to question her about the manner in which she had been able to get to Gondrecourt. Her passports were made out by the French Government, and she explained this to the priest by stating that she had been in France when the war broke out. The questioning was not all on one side, for the visitor asked many questions regarding the strength of the sector and plans. Father Egas dismissed her with a promise to see if she could not be allowed to remain near the front lines. Then he communicated with the American Intelligence Department.

When the so-called American returned for the second time she was told that her request to remain at the front had been granted. A private, one very carefully selected, was detailed to accompany her about the sector. A week passed, and then the private reported back to the Chaplain. He was no longer a private, however. He wore the uniform of an officer. He said the priest's suspicions were well founded, and that the spy was no longer in a position where she could do harm to the cause of the Allies. The woman was alleged to have been a very dangerous person who had worked in the French and British lines and had obtained valuable information.

She was said to have been an expert in collecting information of a military nature, and she had drafted plans of artillery emplacements, machine-gun location, and of the situation of troops on the American line. Father Egas congratulated the new officer for his work.

SUGAR BOARD JUSTIFIED.

Uncontrolled Coffee Goes Up 53% in Price, Despite Overproduction.

In a statement issued yesterday the United States Sugar Equalization Board points out the difference in the percentage of increases between the Government controlled sugar and coffee, which was not controlled. The Sugar Board states that since July 15, 1919, with a world shortage in sugar of about 2,000,000 tons, the price has only risen from 9.2 cents to about 10.9 cents a pound, or about 18 per cent. With coffee the price has risen from 80.1 cents per pound to 94.2 cents, an increase of 53 per cent. The board's statement continues:

"While Government control of coffee by the Food Administration ended with the termination of the war, sugar control continued and is still in existence. There has been this difference also: While the world's production of sugar has decreased constantly during the war, so that it is now about 2,000,000 long tons below normal, the production of coffee has increased. One would normally expect, therefore, that sugar prices would rise in the United States while coffee prices would fall, or at least remain constant. But strangely enough the reverse has been true.

"Since the consumption of sugar in the United States for the year July 15, 1918-July 15, 1919, amounted to about 3,583,000 tons, or 8,025,920,000 pounds, if the people of the United States had paid for the same increase in sugar that they paid in coffee they would have paid about $256,000,000 more than they actually have paid.

"Government control of sugar has saved the American people this sum at least. In addition, the Sugar Equalization Board will turn over to the Treasury of the United States over $30,000,000 made from its margin of 3⅛ cents per hundred pounds on Cuba sugars, a sum which would otherwise have gone to refiners or Cuban producers, or would have been lost in small fractions somewhere in the long road between producer and retailer."

SEEK AGREEMENT ON CHINESE LOANS

Washington and Tokio Discussing Differences on the Consortium Question.

BASIS OF A SETTLEMENT

Japan Might Seek to Exclude Certain Kinds of Loan in Place of Definite Territories.

TOKIO, Nov. 8, (Associated Press.)—The conciliatory and dignified nature of Japan's reply to the American note of last September complaining of lack of co-operation of Japanese troops in the operation of the Trans-Siberian Railway is believed here to have removed any danger of serious complication between Japan and the United States over conducting the railway.

In effect, the reply ratifies the arrangement reached at Vladivostok by Roland S. Morris, the United States Ambassador, and General Oi, (Commander of Japanese forces in Eastern Siberia,) and commits Japan to co-operation in the future. Under the circumstances, it is considered unlikely here that the United States will further pursue the matter.

The Chinese consortium question, however, has come strongly to the foreground as a problem requiring immediate and frank negotiations. Washington has recently informed the Government of Japan that the United States is quite unable to accept Japan's proposal to exclude certain districts of Eastern Inner Mongolia and South Manchuria from the scope of the consortium. Announcement of an independent loan to China of $30,000,000 by a Chicago bank was made simultaneously. The loan is secured by a tobacco and wine monopoly.

This is taken here as a hint that unless Japan sees her way clear to join the consortium on reasonable terms, the United States may adopt the policy of meeting China's needs without awaiting formation by the other powers of a loan group, in which, considering the financial condition of the European nations, Japan would hold a leading rôle. Indications are that Japan's leading bankers favor unconditional pooling of the powers for a loan to China though certain powerful business houses have joined military circles in backing the movement excluding stated Mongolian and Manchurian zones.

The Associated Press correspondent gains the impression from talks he has had with those interested that the exclusion of certain kinds of loans, such as railroad concessions, rather than the exclusion of definite territories, would be a basis of possible settlement.

It is likely the negotiations will be left in the hands of Ambassador Morris at Tokio to be worked out on the spot rather than by a formal long distance exchange of communications. The expectations are that an accord will be reached.

American Loan Blocked.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Efforts to extend a loan to China to tide over what is regarded as a desperate situation threatening the existence of the Government have come to a standstill owing to disagreement over the security offered. The Chicago bankers' group which was negotiating on a loan of $30,000,000 to the northern Government of China, it was learned, demanded that the loan be a lien on the salt tax in addition to other sources of revenue. Objection immediately was made by the Japanese financial interests composing the group of bankers which would be included in the international consortium on the ground that this consortium had first call on the salt tax by previous arrangement with China.

Since the consortium cannot get together on account of the security dispute and of the firm refusal of America to consent to the exclusion of certain districts of Manchuria and Mongolia from the scope of the consortium because that would, in the opinion of officials, amount to a recognition of Japanese domination of those territories, the chances for the Chinese loan are considered remote.

POLES SEE PEACE MENACED.

Protest Against "Injustices" Done by Treaty Makers.

The peace of Europe is menaced by injustices done to Poland by the Allies, according to an open letter to the allied nations, signed by Polish leaders, which was made public yesterday. Among the signers are the heads of the Roman Catholic, Armenian Catholic, and Protestant churches in Poland, the Presidents of the universities in Warsaw, Cracow, Posen, and Lvov, the Mayors of these cities and the editors of twenty-three Polish papers.

The injustices charged are enumerated under ten headings. It is asserted that the allied diplomats were "treacherously imposed upon" by the Germans. The first grievance mentioned is the establishment of the city of Danzig as a free State, possession of the port being declared "indispensable to Poland."

The letter protests against plebiscites ordered in the districts of Olsztyn, Allenstein, part of Kwidzyn, and especially in Upper Silesia.

Respecting reports of Jewish pogroms, it asserts that after the liberation of Vilna, the German press spread reports of a pogrom in which 2,000 Jews were massacred, which an American correspondent is quoted as reporting afterward to have been baseless. It says that in the Lemberg pogrom the only Jews killed were thirty-four who "were shooting at the Polish troops."

After declaring anything prejudicial to Poland a triumph for Germany, the letter says:

"This is why, while expressing to the allied nations our deepest and eternal gratitude for the help they gave us in reconstructing the Polish State, we are bound to affirm that as long as full justice is not granted to us the basis of European peace will be neither secure nor durable."

STILL HUNT PLACES FOR EX-SERVICE MEN

Five Thousand of Them Are Listed at Re-employment Committee's Office.

SEEK JOBS UP TO $25,000

A Special Effort Is Being Made to Help Them Before Armistice Day.

Out of more than 15,000 applicants who have registered at the Re-employment Committee's office at 505 Pearl Street there are still 5,000 former service men who are without jobs. Today, when in many churches Armistice Day will be observed, the committee hopes that these jobless men will be remembered. Alfred L. Smith, Executive Secretary of the committee, said yesterday that he had written to local clergymen asking them to remind their congregations that these men are still out of work.

William Fellowes Morgan, Chairman of the Re-employment Committee, made public yesterday a list of men in various occupations who are still seeking employment. Of the 5,000 out of work 2,000 reside in Brooklyn.

"The Re-employment Committee is conducting a campaign to place as many of these men as possible before Armistice Day," said Mr. Morgan. "Tomorrow clergymen will appeal to their congregations to aid these boys who were largely responsible for the signing of the armistice. Because there are so many men out of work and at the request of the War Department, the Re-employment Bureau will continue to operate until Dec. 20. We had hoped to have a job for every former fighter ere now, but the lists still show hundreds out of employment. I trust employers will show preference to former service men when they need workers."

The list shows that among the former service men seeking positions here there are 2,583 general clerks, 1,510 chauffeurs, 1,349 laborers, 1,087 salesmen, 901 machine hands, 574 automobile mechanics and helpers, 557 shipping clerks, 483 teamsters, 403 shipyard workers, 486 electricians, 331 stock clerks, 310 pipefitters, 188 guards, conductors and motormen, 185 painters, 188 hotel workers, 109 watchmen, 108 typists, 65 stenographers, 30 interpreters and translators, 25 superintendents of construction, 25 foreign trade men, and 50 college graduates who wish to learn some business.

Men registered at the bureau are seeking salaried positions paying from $18 a week to $25,000 a year. There are about 1,000 registrants in the Mental Workers Division, which is furnishing more high grade men to New York employers than any other agency in the city. A call was recently received for a man to fill a position that paid $25,000 a year. Several of the applicants in this division were in business for themselves when they heard the call to the colors. There are men registered in this section who ordinarily would never consider applying at an employment agency for a business connection. A large number of these men comprise former commissioned officers in the army, navy and marines.

In the Division for Disabled Heroes are many men who were either wounded, gassed or shell shocked. Most of these men cannot return to their former occupations because of the nature of the disabilities sustained while in the service. The majority of these applicants are looking for light work, outside jobs or clerical positions.

In addition to the above mentioned classes, there are hundreds of men who formerly were office clerks, but who are now trying to learn a trade. The fact that there are more than 100 strikes prevailing in the city makes it next to impossible for these men to become apprentices.

WOULD BLOCK PROFITEERS.

Food Official Favors Extending Period of Sugar Control.

Upon receiving a report that the 1920 sugar crop is being offered for sale at 20 cents a pound on the New Orleans exchange and 25 cents on the Chicago exchange, Arthur Williams, Food Administrator, said yesterday he favored extending Federal control of sugar for six months or a year longer.

While he did not think sugar would ever return to the pre-war price, Mr. Williams said Federal control would go far toward eliminating profiteering.

"Ninety per cent. of the sugar profiteers," he said, "are irresponsible business men who expect to become millionaires overnight."

During the shortage, he said, purchasers have refrained from disclosing the names of profiteers for two reasons. One was fear that their supply would be cut off and the other aversion to publicity.

Half a million dollars' worth of surplus army food and clothing was placed on sale yesterday at the United States Quartermaster Store No. 1, in the 2d Field Artillery Armory, Franklin Avenue and 166th Street, the Bronx. When the doors were thrown open at 10 o'clock 2,000 persons were waiting and the police had to send additional men to keep order. Captain G. W. Smith said if the demand continued he could obtain $2,000,000 worth of surplus army merchandise to sell.

Dr. J. C. Day, the Commissioner of Public Markets, said the sale of navy surplus food probably would begin no later than Wednesday. Consumers will be permitted to buy in small quantities or in bulk and consumers' groups, hospitals, and charitable organizations may buy such quantities as they need.

GOBELIN TAPESTRY, $3,800.

"Battle of Arbela" and Paintings Sold by Alien Property Custodian.

A Gobelin tapestry, the "Battle of Arbela," from the famous series of the "History of Alexander the Great," 1685, was sold by order of Francis P. Garvan, Alien Property Custodian, at the Anderson Galleries yesterday afternoon, going to A. H. Laidlaw for $3,800. The cartoon was made by Charles Le Brun, Court Painter to Louis XIV., and the original cartoons for the series are in the Museum of the Louvre, Paris.

The series was begun by Le Brun in 1663, and later, when he became Director of the Gobelins factory, was one of the first works of the new establishment. The tapestry is of silk and wool, 11 feet high by 16 wide. The cartoon was one of the masterpieces of Le Brun and the tapestry represents a beautiful harmony of color. It was expertized by Dr. R. Meyer-Reifstahl.

A painting by Gerard Terburg, an oval piece, "Portrait of a Young Girl," full length, went to the Ehrlich Galleries for $2,500. "Christ Bearing the Cross," of the Ferrarese School, 1500, went to Warwick House for $380; a "Portrait of a Nobleman," French school, middle of sixteenth century, went to the same buyer for $975. These were all sold by order of Mr. Garvan in the course of a sale of private owners, which has been going on through the week. A Persian Mis Serabend rug, 6 feet by 16, was sold yesterday to H. S. Rubens for $1,250. The returns for the day were $23,707, and for the sale $34,773.

HAMMERSTEIN SUES WIDOW.

Seeks Payment for His Father's Funeral from Stepmother.

Arthur Hammerstein, son of Oscar Hammerstein, obtained an order from Surrogate Fowler yesterday, directing his stepmother, Mrs. Emma Swift Hammerstein, to show cause why he should not be reimbursed for $7,209 he paid for his father's funeral expenses.

He said he paid the bill on the promise of his stepmother to repay him, and that she has collected rents and other moneys in excess of the sum due him but has ignored his requests to settle. Among items on the bill are $3,200 for the Woodlawn burial plot, $1,550 for the coffin, and $400 for a floral blanket of violets and asters.

BUTCHERS ON A STRIKE CUT PRICES ON MEATS

Open Shops in Chicago to Substantiate Charges That the Dealers Are Profiteering.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—To substantiate their charges that some of their employers were profiteering, striking butchers today opened a large retail shop and sold porterhouse steak at 18 cents a pound, veal chops at 16 cents a pound, and hamburger steak at 10 cents a pound.

Other meats were sold at a correspondingly low price, and the union butchers declared that, although the figures were from 30 to 75 per cent. below the price charged by a majority of retail butchers, the strikers were making a fair profit on their sales.

The union butchers are demanding an increase of from $35 to $40 a week in their minimum weekly wage.

JURIDICAL UNION MEETS.

International Body to Frame New Law Code for All Nations.

PARIS, Nov. 8, (Associated Press.)—The first draft of the declaration on the Rights and Duties of Nations, which is proposed as a basis for a future code of international law, is now before the International Juridical Union, which opened its Autumn session yesterday. Leon Bourgeois, the French member of the Council of the League of Nations and honorary President of the union, presided.

The document consists of a preamble and four articles, outlining the rights of States; the independence of States, the equality of all States before the law, and the duties of States. The principles are stated in broad terms and in less than 500 words.

It is proposed to follow this declaration with a draft of international law, which will be submitted to the various Governments or to the League of Nations for approval.

The International Juridical Union is an unofficial body, created last May, with forty members of various nationalities. The American members are Elihu Root and Professor James Brown Scott, the latter a member of the American Peace Commission staff, who is Second Vice President. Baron Makino represents Japan; Dr. Drago, Brazil; Alessandro Alvarez, Chile, and Fernando Prida, Spain. Francisco de la Barra, former Provisional President of Mexico, First Vice President, represents Mexico.

To be considered is Señor de la Barra's plan for a codification of international law which takes up the general principles applicable to specific cases.

FIRE CAPTAIN SURERS HURT

Carried Down by Collapse of Floor in Burning Building.

While fighting a fire in the office building at 35 Howard Street early yesterday morning Captain Frank Surers of Engine 20 was so badly hurt that he was taken to Volunteer Hospital for treatment. Captain Surers was carried from the fifth floor to the fourth when the fifth floor collapsed. Firemen who heard the crash did not realize that the Captain had been carried down. Some time later a fireman who managed to get to the fourth floor found the Captain moving about in an effort to reach a window to call for help.

The two upper floors of the building were destroyed and the damage was estimated at $10,000. They were occupied by the New York Tassel and Cord Company. The cause of the fire was not known. It was discovered by a passing automobile driver.

of the publishing firm who was mentioned denied the charge.

Just what will happen in those shops where settlements have already been made with the secessionist unions is not altogether clear. Mailers and bookbinders in the employ of The Nation Press refused yesterday to handle the work produced at that shop, and the same situation has arisen in other establishments.

The present outlook is that these employers will have to make shift with whatever forces they can muster until the Printers' League and the International unions settle their differences by arbitration, and then these shops will probably offer the same or better terms to international men. Many of the settlements already made involve the condition that final terms shall be made dependent upon the final settlement throughout the trade.

Outlines League's Attitude.

When the decision of the pressmen became known yesterday, William Green, Chairman of the Labor Committee of the Printers' League, issued the following statement expressing the attitude of the employers on the matter:

"The decision of the pressmen to return to the international in a body is interpreted by the members of the Printers' League as the beginning of the end. As far as the pressmen are concerned, the present difficulty is settled. The fact that the International officials say it is impossible for the local to return to the International in a body affects the problem but little, inasmuch as the individual members are allying themselves with the international by the score. All day long yesterday there was a line of men waiting at the International headquarters to take out cards, and it was necessary to hold the office open during the night to satisfy the demand.

"On Monday morning the biggest printing shops in town will resume operations. Among them are the Schweinler Press, Butterick, Federal, Isaac Goldman, Brooklyn Daily Eagle, C. & J. O'Brien, De Vinne, and Carey plants. These concerns have many of their old men, both pressmen and compositors, back on the job, ready to go to work Monday morning. They will be given a $6 a week increase offered by the employers. The refusal of the feeders yesterday morning to join with the pressmen in going into the International seemingly complicates the situation, but the number of feeders who have already come back to work with new international cards makes us believe that the meeting of Local 23 did not reflect the spirit of the union. Gradually the feeders are returning to work, and the strength of the opposition to the international is lessened.

"The members of Big Six have lost their reason for vacationing now that the pressmen have come into the international. Their refusal to go to work was just a move to show their sympathy for the pressmen. With the pressmen working, that sympathy is a bit misplaced, and we expect to see the Typographical Union back on the job Monday.

"If that happens, there is but one step more to be taken, and that is arbitration between Big Six and the Printers' League. Big Six asks for a forty-four-hour week and an increase of $14. The employers offer a $6 increase for a forty-eight-hour week and arbitration, and Big Six has refused to arbitrate the shorter week."

The officials of the International Pressmen's and Assistants' Union were greatly pleased last night over the outcome of the lockout. From the beginning of the trouble they have been supporting the employers. Mr. Berry told last night how the committee from No. 51 had come to him yesterday afternoon to broach the proposition of returning to the international union in a body, whereas at that hour more than two-thirds of the men had already joined individually and the old union was practically out of existence.

Mr. Berry said that the old union men would be taken in without discrimination, but that they would be expected to promise adherence to American principles, not to foment discord, and to respect contracts. He said the International did not want to assume responsibility for those who disregarded those principles. Mr. Berry said that some of the printing work had undoubtedly gone out of the city forever, but that in most cases it would be brought back. He added that, while the union regulations would be adhered to as strictly as possible, the temporary emergency created by the absence of leaders and paper handlers in some plants would be met in the most practical way possible.

The presidents of eight local unions issued a statement yesterday, after a meeting held during the morning, in which they outlined their stand in the present controversy. The unions represented were the photo-engravers, stereotypers, electrotypers, mailers, bookbinders (men and women), paper cutters and paper rulers. These comprise the New York Printing Trades Council. After rehearsing the history of the present trouble and declaring that the seceding unions initiated the difficulties, the statement asserts that "all members of the printing unions were and are in sympathy with the movement for a 44-hour week in the printing industry and wages in equity with the present cost of living."

It declares that the local unions opposed to secession have not trespassed the jurisdiction of any of the other printing trades, and adds that the stand of "Big Six" in refusing to work with members of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union in various plants was a direct stand in favor of secession, and the first move made by any of the local printing trades unions in discriminating with whom they would work."

The statement continues:

"Appeals have been made for closer co-operation among the printing trades for the present and future. This is impossible until all locals reaffiliate with their respective international unions and thereby with the local Allied Printing Trades Council, through which medium the best assistance and co-operation can be given. By this we do not want to be understood as sanctioning the officials in any international unions or other bodies. We do believe that if abuses exist they should be rectified from within. To secede is to shirk responsibility and desert and leave to their fate other and smaller sister locals. Bitter experience has taught that secession at its best has nothing to offer but chaos and confusion, with ultimate regret to all.

"The pressmen and compositors must realize that the action of the members of 'Big 6' in carrying on their unwarranted walkout or vacation against the wishes of their officers and against the instructions of their local union, and the action of Nos. 23 and 51 in [illegible] with the approval of union compositors and press men in other cities. This is best demonstrated by the fact that an enormous amount of publications and other matter is being printed by these members in other cities without protest. It is well known that some of the officers of these unions while in this city not only sanctioned this work coming to their jurisdiction, but welcomed it, and also assured the publishers that the work would be completed without interruption.

"New York publications are now being printed in Chicago, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Boston, Baltimore, Newark, Albany, all of which are working under contracts which call for a forty-eight-hour week and in fact in any city to which it has been sent. The fact that these magazines are on the news stands is proof that the members of the Typographical Union and Printing Pressmen's Unions in other cities are doing this work and do not support the New York situation, either morally or financially.

"To bring about a satisfactory adjustment and to secure the co-operation of all of the printing trades unions in this city, reaffiliation with their international unions is the first and most essential step necessary to be taken by all seceding unions—this is urgent unless still more work is to be driven from New York City to other localities where it will not only be executed by union men but encouraged to remain permanently."

PRESIDENT STILL GAINING.

Grayson Says Visiting Physicians Note General Improvement.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Dr. Francis X. Dercum, of Philadelphia, paid his regular weekly visit to President Wilson today and held a consultation with Rear-Admirals Grayson and Stitt and Dr. Sterling Ruffin of this city.

After the consultation Admiral Grayson said the visiting physicians were well satisfied with the President's condition and noted a general improvement.

Two bills, one providing indemnity to Colorado citizens whose arms and ammunition were seized by Federal troops during the 1914 coal strike and the other providing for reclamation of arid Nevada lands, became law today with the President's signature.

A number of minor measures also became effective without the President's signature, including that extending Federal steam vessel regulations to Shipping Board vessels and that granting lands for school purposes on Government town sites.

ASSAILS BULGARIAN TREATY

League of Friends of Greece Says United States Was Too Lenient.

The League of Friends of Greece in America, with offices in Boston, Mass., yesterday sent out a statement in which it is declared that the Bulgarian peace document sets up an unjust peace, and practically charges that the United States is responsible for the allegedly gentle treatment that Bulgaria has received compared to some of the other countries that suffered through the war. The statement, in part, reads:

"We ask now what has influenced the Allies to reward Bulgaria with 1,500,000,000 francs and with other billions in properties stolen from our three Balkan allies?

"We have only one answer to give. It is the answer given to us by a trustworthy head of the Y. M. C. A. in the Balkans. And the answer is that the American Commission at Paris is practically besieged with Bulgarian agents who swear eternal Bulgarian gratitude to America, with honest but unenlightened American missionaries in Bulgaria, with well-meaning but one-sided traditional friends of the Bulgarians, the professors and trustees of Robert College at Constantinople.

"The Bulgarian treaty is unjust. Its injustice affects three of our allies in the Balkans. We had hoped for peace in that part of the world, depending upon the good-will and the friendship of our three allies there. But we have alienated their sympathies; we have wounded their pride; we have helped their enemy. We have only ourselves to blame for having allowed the missionaries of Bulgaria to dictate our Balkan policy."

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 8.—A request to Governor Holcomb to call a session of the Legislature to act upon a daylight saving plan will be made by the Mayors of Connecticut cities. A conference of the Mayors today appointed a committee to wait upon the Governor.

As yet Hartford is the only city which has acted in favor of local daylight saving next year.

A great majority of Hathaway customers, since the earliest days of our business, have patronized our showrooms again and again.

The intrinsic worth of the furniture is not the only reason for their repeated patronage. Discrimination in selecting the pieces to appear on our floors has been an important influence.

Finally, a consistent policy of fairness in determining the price standard has helped materially to hold the friends this store has made.

MUSIC

By RICHARD ALDRICH.

The Boston Orchestra Again.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ended its New York visit with its concert in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, fully attended by its admirers and friends. Mr. Monteux's offering was not altogether a success in the matter of program-making, nor yet in the matter of selection. Haydn's symphony in D, called "La Reine de France," was agreeable and not too familiar; a hearty expression of the composer's geniality. It was heard with pleasure, in a performance full of spirit and carefully wrought shadings, with amply vigorous contrasts in dynamics, and with a quality of tone that seemed rather more ingratiating than what was heard in Schumann's symphony the other evening. The orchestra was reduced by half the number of double basses in this symphony, but no other changes were made in the direction of dimensions supposedly Haydn's.

But why does Mr. Monteux busy himself with unearthing the inferior and half-forgotten overtures of Beethoven? He exhumed the "Prometheus" overture at the first concert, and now he performs the same operation for the overture to "King Stephen." If it were a case of buried treasure brought to light, there would be cause for gratitude; but neither "Prometheus" nor "King Stephen" is buried treasure. The music of "King Stephen" was written for an occasion, the opening of a theatre; and music thus originated is not always inspired. This overture is not, and the place of obscurity where it has been resting is the one that best becomes it; not even such an excellent performance as yesterday's can give it life.

It must be said, also, that Franck's symphonic poem, "The Wild Huntsman," which had been heard before in New York, but not often enough to be familiar, is not Franck at his best; yet it is an ingenious and effective treatment of a theme that has appealed to many musicians; and not all have treated it so successfully, with so much atmospheric suggestiveness and picturesqueness, in terms so purely musical. The performance of it was admirable, full and rich in color, without excess in dynamics, without undue striving for realistic effects, and yet with the dramatic meaning the composer was seeking.

It was in the selections from Igor Stravinsky's ballet music for "L'Oiseau de Feu" that the orchestra and Mr. Monteux achieved their greatest success yesterday. Five selections were played, the introduction depicting the enchanted garden and the dance of the Fire Bird; the supplication of the Fire Bird, the playing of the princesses with the golden apples, the lullaby, princesses' dance, the infernal dance. Selections from this music had already been played in concert in New York by Mr. Damrosch, in December, 1916, and the performances of the ballet by the Russian company are well remembered. It may be said that it is hardly fair to play Stravinsky's music as a concert piece, yet it doubtless lends itself to such treatment more readily than the music to "Petrouchka" would.

The music is exquisite in its fancifulness, boldly fantastic, capricious, ingenious, picturesque, pictorial; illustrating the changing phantasms of the ballet. Something of its fantasticality, its imaginative power, becomes meaningless when it is taken away from the fantasticality of the action. Yet the lullaby, the dance of the princesses, and, perhaps somewhat less, the scene of the playing of the princesses with the golden apples, have enough of their own to say, as music, to stand fairly well by themselves.

In all these Stravinsky's imaginative quality, his skill in fitting the music to the scene, and his extraordinary resourcefulness in writing for the orchestra, in the devising of strange, exotic, gleaming color, is beguiling.

Mr. Monteux conducted the music with complete knowledge and the fullest sympathy—he was the conductor of notable performances of the ballet in Paris and London and knows its spirit as do few. The performance was brilliant.

Mr. Baklanoff Sings.

George Baklanoff, the Russian baritone, who has won admiration for his dramatic singing in the Boston Opera Company, and latterly in the Chicago company, gave a song recital last evening in Carnegie Hall, for which a large audience was provided. It has before now often happened that a capable operatic artist has not been fortunate in attempts in the literature of song upon the concert platform. Mr. Baklanoff has done many admirable things in his operatic appearances here; he has shown a real dramatic power and presented impersonations that have been dramatically moving, even powerful, in which the voice has been a potent factor. In his recital of songs last evening he was singularly dull.

His singing of airs from operas by Grétry and Gaveaux, "Voici des Roses" from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust,"—in itself dull—and even the serenade from "Don Giovanni," "Deh, vieni alla finestra," had few traces of distinction, few sparks of dramatic fire. There was something of the impassioned appeal in the prayer from Gaveaux's "L'Enfant Prodigue," but little of the rakish Don in the serenade. Nor did the spirit of Schumann's songs, "By Moonlight," "Spring Night," and "The Hidalgo" appeal movingly to him.

Thus heard, Mr. Baklanoff's voice showed its better qualities only in the lower ranges; in the higher it was under imperfect control and had little beauty or vibrancy. A group of French songs and another by Rachmaninoff in Russian completed the program.

CONCERTS FOR YOUNG BEGIN

Symphony Orchestra Entertains—Dorothy Berliner and May Peterson.

The New York Symphony Orchestra opened its third year of "Symphony Concerts for Children" yesterday morning in Aeolian Hall, which was well filled with young listeners to Mr. Damrosch's accomplished string players. Overtures to "Oberon" and "William Tell" were illustrated by the leader's talk and the men's performance. There were also an Arabian song from Saint-Saens's "Algerian Scenes," the larghetto from Beethoven's second symphony, and the "Dance of the Sylphs" by Berlioz.

Dorothy Berliner, a pianist of much technical skill and musical feeling, gave a recital in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon, playing single works of Beethoven and of Chopin, whose B minor sonata was the most searching test of her powers, and in conclusion five little pieces by Spanish composers. These included an "Evocation" of Spanish themes by Albeniz, a dance by Granados, a caprice of Nogues, a bolero by De la Cinna, and rhythmic "Calesera" by Laparra.

May Peterson, soprano of the Metropolitan, with Samuel Ljungkvist, tenor, and the Tollefsen Trio, appeared last evening in the series of Aeolian recitals arranged by the St. Erik Society for Advancement of Swedish Art. Among the composers represented were Frans Berwald, Stenhammar, Sjogren, Alfven and Tor Aulin, as well as Hugo Bedinger, formerly of Brooklyn, now of Lindsborg, Kas., and others less known.

A Bright Place.

By DR. BERTHOLD A. BAER.

They came to the City of Thousand Pleasures to find diversion and rest.

He found rest—rest for eternity.

And she, she was alone in this big City, a stranger among strangers.

Services were held at The Funeral Church.

The last strains of the organ had died away.

The demised was conveyed to the Railway Station en route to El Paso, Texas.

Two months later Frank E. Campbell received a letter:

"I shall never forget your place—it was the last one I saw in that big City. I say it was a bright place, notwithstanding the great, awful sorrow that abode and yet abides in my heart."

"What made The Funeral Church appear to you as a bright place?" I inquired.

"I was in a hotel, alone with my great grief. The manager recommended your place. I asked him to send for Mr. Campbell.

"I expected a man to call. Instead, he sent a woman. You know, it takes a woman to understand a woman. She talked to me like a friend; she helped me, she anticipated my needs and my wants. I felt truly thankful to Mr. Campbell.

"Then came the preparation to send my dear one home.

"There was nothing for me to do; Mr. Campbell attended to everything. After a short service in The Funeral Church, the remains were carried to the station.

"The same woman accompanied me to my train. Would you believe it: on my seat I found the latest magazines and a bunch of flowers.

"The one bright spot for me in that City of Sorrows is The Funeral Church, where the stranger finds a friend and the stricken, comfort."

STEEL PRODUCTION IS ON INCREASE

Industry Thus Far Has Felt Practically No Effect from the Coal Strike.

STEEL STRIKE IS WANING

Resumption of Operations Is Proceeding Rapidly in Most of the Districts.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 8.—The iron and steel industry has thus far felt practically no effects from the coal strike. The Government fuel distributers intend to give the steel mills and by-product coke plants such a degree of priority as will prevent any curtailment in production, but require that stocks be consumed first. Nearly all steel mills have stocks of coal, varying from a two weeks' to a four weeks' supply.

The Connellsville region has not been affected by the coal strike. Last year the Connellsville region produced at its best somewhat over 500,000 tons of coal a week for its own coking operations, beside shipping several hundred thousand tons. Lately it has been producing about 300,000 tons of coal weekly for its own coking, and shipping a still larger quantity, part of it going to by-product ovens, part to railroads, and a small part to general industrial uses. The coke market has been steady the last week, at about $5.75 for furnace coke and $7 to $7.25 for good grades of foundry coke.

The steel strike, now ending its seventh week, has not entirely disappeared, but has made good progress in that direction in the last week. Except for two or three spots there is practically no strike left in Western Pennsylvania. The Wheeling district remains almost wholly closed. In the Mahoning Valley resumption is proceeding rather rapidly. The Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company is shipping fair tonnage of pipe and sheets; the Carnegie Steel Company is shipping a moderate tonnage of merchant bars, while the Brier Hill Steel Company is making a good tonnage of plates and a small tonnage of sheets.

The Republic Iron and Steel Company is operating two blast furnaces and five open-hearth furnaces. The last named company has normal operation at its bar iron plant at East Chicago, its rail rerolling mill at Moline, Ill., and its Pioneer merchant blast furnaces in Alabama. Cleveland is still greatly affected by the strike, but Chicago and Gary are operating well above 50 per cent. in practically all departments. The steel plant at Ensley, Ala., is operating beyond rated capacity.

Production Rate Is 60 Per Cent.

Production of steel in October averaged about 60 per cent. of the rate just before the strike, while production now is about 0 per cent. A fair guess would be that when the strike is ended it will have involved the loss of approximately one month's production.

Steel has not become as scarce, by reason of the strike, as was expected, these forecasts of scarcity having been based upon the fact that steel was far from plentiful before the strike began, but it looks now as though the demand before the strike was due in part to a desire for material in order to stock up. It is regarded as altogether certain, however, that after the strike is settled steel will be in heavy demand for a long time, as the demand thus far this year has involved scarcely any railroad steel, yet the railroads are certain to require considerable tonnages in the near future.

Demand of this description has just begun to appear, as the Pennsylvania Railroad put out an inquiry a few days ago for 200,000 tons of rails, the order to be contingent upon the return of the railroads to their owners. The rail mills did not care to bid on such terms, and the Pennsylvania has placed an order for 10,000 tons of rails with an Eastern mill, there being no strings attached. Western roads are out for 150,000 tons of rails. The outlook is that rail production in 1920 will be governed by the amount of steel that can be spared for rolling into rails rather than by the demand. It is unlikely that there will be enough steel available to make a new record in rail production, the present record being the 4,000,000 tons rolled in 1906.

For small lots of finished steel for prompt shipment, delivery premiums are the rule, but the regular market, for forward delivery, is the March 21 schedule, and this schedule probably will be held by the large conservative interests as the market for some time.

Pig iron is advancing at a more rapid rate. The last important sales of valley foundry iron for forward delivery were at $28.75, furnace, or $2 over the March 21 price, while for forward delivery basic and Bessemer are quotable at March 21 prices. For early delivery Bessemer has sold at premiums of from 55 cents to $1.50. The eastern foundry iron market is up to $34.10, delivered Philadelphia, this being $4 above the low point, which fell in early July. Some further advances in pig iron are considered probable, and a number of furnace interests are out of the market awaiting the event.

Supplies of common grade sheets are fairly adequate to the demand, the situation being better than a month ago. At the outset of the iron and steel strike the supply of ordinary sheets seemed to be curtailed to a large extent, through the strike being strong in districts where production ran chiefly to common grade sheets, but of late, with production of sheets constantly increasing, at a number of plants the experience is that of being able to produce ordinary sheets but of being unable to carry all the material through the processes necessary for special sheets. The situation at the present time seems to be that special sheets are in much shorter supply than common grades.

Automakers Expect Heavy Deliveries.

Automobile builders are looking for heavy deliveries of sheets, and this despite the fact that they are shorter of several other descriptions of material than they are of sheets. Their production needs are so great that they are simply applying pressure all along the line, calling for heavy deliveries of all their raw materials. Some large tonnages are offered mills for deliveries over the first half of 1920, but the mills are looking at the offered tonnages in rather a reserved manner. It is difficult for the observer to keep pace with the rapidly growing sheet needs of the automobile industry. For illustration, there are few outside the industry who would suppose that there are four automobile concerns (counting General Motors as one) that consume sheets each at the rate of more than 100,000 tons a year, yet such is the case.

Sheet mills operations now average more than 75 per cent., or in other words the industry shows, in point of tonnage, little effect from the strike, as before it began the industry was operating at only between 80 and 85 per cent. The leading interest this week operated 90 per cent. of its sheet mills, showing a gain of 2 per cent. in the week. There has been steady gain in operation each week for the last six, and even at Gary, Ind., the hotbed of unionism, the leading interest is doing well, operating fourteen of the twenty-two sheet mills there. Independents are averaging over 60 per cent., also showing good gains during the last week.

Talk of advanced price in sheets is still heard among the independents, but such a policy does not find any favor with the leading interest. It has been held that the higher prices at which sheet bars have sold recently, up to about $45, Pittsburgh, might justify higher prices for sheets, but the basis market for sheet bars has not advanced. The United States Steel Corporation produces much more than one-half the sheet bars of the country and sells large tonnages to independents, and it has shown no disposition to advance its prices.

The much stronger undertone in the scrap market reported a week ago has developed into enough sales at higher prices to establish the market on a higher basis, and in keeping with what some observers have regarded as the true level of values for two or three weeks past. Large lots of scrap were not obtainable at the prices ruling at the beginning of the strike, but with consumers generally indisposed to make purchases the market did not promptly disclose its position. There has been considerable turnover of heavy melting steel at prices from $20 to $21, delivered, and for specially desirable assortments higher than $21 has been obtained in several instances. In some cases buyers have larger consumption now, while in other cases they are buying against prospective heavier consumption.

In the Pittsburgh district, Carnegie Steel and Jones & Laughlin are operating normal, while at Monessen operations are very light. Steubenville is doing practically nothing, but at Youngstown operations are increasing at a fairly good rate. Pig iron being hard to buy, even at advanced prices, there has been a further advance in cupola cast scrap. Demand for low phosphorous scrap has improved, as the steel-casting plants are running quite well. Heavy melting steel is quoted up $1.50 a ton, also low phosphorus, and No. 1 cast is up $1 a ton. Bundled sheet, hydraulic compressed, and a few other items are up slightly.

Nothing has as yet appeared stating what prices will prevail for tin plate in the first half of 1920, but the belief is still firm that the present $7 price will not be interfered with. Tin plate operations continue to gain on the strike, gradually but surely. This week about 65 per cent. of the mills were operating, the total in the country being slightly over 500, of which the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company has 242. Operations by the leading interest and the independents are about the same.

The strike affects different districts in a manner peculiar to itself. For instance, the leading interest only began operating at the American works, Elwood, Ind., two weeks ago, but now it has thirteen of the twenty-two mills running. On the other hand, two weeks ago it had four mills running at New Kensington, Penn., and now the number has only swelled to seven. At Monessen, also, the resumption is rather slow. Gary, Ind., furnished the agreeable surprise to the mill companies, as it was supposed to be the stronghold of unionism, yet the leading interest is operating two-thirds of its tin plate mills.

While it is the settled policy of the coal distributing authorities to see that the steel industry operates, a careful watch will be kept that no more coal is put into coke than is absolutely required. This is necessary because there is a set maximum selling price on coal and no control of coke prices, the coke market being much above the cost of production based on the set price for coal. At $2.35 for coal, that going into a ton of coke would bring in the market about $3.50 only, on a 67 per cent. yield, and adding $1 for conversion would make $4.50, whereas the market now stands at about $5.75 for furnace coke and $7 to $7.25 for foundry coke. If it becomes necessary which the authorities do not expect to be the case, to set a price limit on coke, the limit will be a relatively low one. By no means will the price be the old Government limits of $6 on furnace coke, with $7 on foundry. There are some cases of steel mills being short of coal now, but the shortage applies only to certain descriptions of coal, the tonnages desired not being particularly large.

WOULD ELIMINATE EXCESS PROFITS TAX

Morris F. Frey Suggests Raising Revenue Through the Imposition of a Gross Sales Tax.

SEES PROGRESS RETARDED

Foreign Trade One Line of Activity Especially Hampered by Present High Levies.

Immediate reforms in Federal taxation are needed if business is to progress and expand sufficiently to meet the demands for increased production in this country, according to Morris F. Frey, tax consultant of the Guaranty Trust Company, who urges that these reforms should embrace a repeal of the excess profits tax, and who recommends the raising of necessary revenue through the medium of a simple gross sales tax. Discussing the present situation, Mr. Frey says:

"All clear-thinking Americans must realize that we are passing through one of the most critical periods in American history. Social unrest is becoming more and more pronounced, and the demands of labor must be met by a division of the earnings of industry and commerce. The claims of labor cannot be satisfied if business is to be indefinitely burdened as at present, with taxes so high as to discourage enterprise and retard production. Nothing can help solve the present unstable social conditions better than largely increased production, but business concerns cannot be expected to accept the hazards of extensive expansion and at the same time pay to the Government a large proportion of their profits in the form of excess profits and income taxes.

As to the repeal of the excess profits tax Mr. Frey says:

"One of the most urgent reforms in our present system of taxation is the repeal of the excess profits tax. This tax, in its present form, though probably justifiable as a means of raising revenue for the prosecution of the war, is both unscientific in principle and economically unsound. Although this tax is in the form of a direct tax on profits, it is, in effect, a most unsatisfactory commodity tax.

"A manufacturer, or merchant, or other business concern subject to the tax is required to estimate in advance the amount which he intends to add to the selling price of the commodity and to pass the same on to the ultimate consumer in order to protect himself against the heavy imposition. Because of the uncertainty of the determination of tax, owing to the intricacies and complexities of the law, a business concern is apt to overestimate, rather than underestimate, its liability. In doing this it becomes an unintentional profiteer in protecting itself from an undue usurpation of its earnings. If we abolish the excess profits tax we undoubtedly will have eliminated a potent factor in the existing high cost of living.

Mr. Frey says that inequalities produced by the excess profits tax are so many that it would be impossible to enumerate them all, especially when they become more apparent with the age of the law. He points out that the effect of the application of the tax is often the result of change in the organization of the corporation or the age of the corporation.

Regarding the income tax, Mr. Frey says:

"Based on the estimates of the Administration, approximately 35 per cent. of the cost of the war has been borne by current taxation. This is a greater amount than the original program called for, and is due largely to the ease with which a Legislature may increase the rates of taxation on incomes without realizing the ultimate effect of the high assessment. To continue to raise such enormous sums of revenue by means of an assessment on incomes will place a greater burden on posterity by impeding the industrial growth of the country than would the passing to them of a larger contribution to the war debt than is now contemplated.

"Moreover, our high taxes militate against the expansion of our foreign trade, which at this time is so important to the future prosperity of our industries. The high rates for money which are demanded by the investor because of heavy taxation deter us from opening commercial credits to them or from freely investing in their securities."

"Ample revenue may be raised and our excess profits tax abolished and income tax lowered by the enactment, in lieu thereof, of a scientific and simple consumption tax in the nature of a tax on gross sales. It is estimated that a general consumption tax, based on gross sales, at the rate of 1 per cent. would yield amounts varying from $1,250,000 to $3,500,000 annually, depending upon the extent of the application of the tax, the former amount being realized if the tax were confined exclusively to retail sales, and the latter amount if applied to all turnovers. A tax of this character is so evenly distributed that it would be felt but little; at the same time it would be most productive. In most cases the tax would be passed on to the consumer who would pay the small assessment as a part of the cost of the product. It would be so light, however, that it would hardly be realized. In many cases the amount paid would be so small that the cost of the goods would not be increased, but the tax would be borne by the seller or producer. In all cases competition could be depended upon to prevent any excessive increases in the cost of products or merchandise on account of the tax.

"In addition to the uniformly equitable character of the tax, the administration and enforcement of a law of this character would be simple and would relieve both the public and the Government from the unnecessary confusion and expense incidental to a law involving the intricate and complex provisions of the excess profits tax. With the reduction of the expenses of the Government which will come with the resumption of normal conditions, the gross sales tax may be repealed and the needs of the Government met by the revenue derived from income taxes and import duties.

"Among other amendments of the law which are advisable is the continuance of the present provision of the law, expiring in 1920, which permits the allowance of a net loss in one year against the net income of the following or preceding year, and the extension of the period of thirty days from date of discovery to one year from such date within which the fair market value of mines, oil, and gas wells must be determined for the purpose of the depletion allowance."

GAIN $100,000,000 IN BILL HOLDINGS

Reserve Banks Also Report Increase in Reserve Deposits and Note Circulation.

MORE WAR PAPER ON HAND

Gain for the Week in This Classification Is $89,900,000—Other Discounts Fall Off.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Further addition of over $100,000,000 to the Federal Reserve Bank's total bill holdings, also substantial increases in reserve deposits and Federal Reserve note circulation, are indicated by the Federal Reserve Board's weekly bank statement issued as at the close of business on Nov. 7.

War paper on hand went up $89,900,000, the increase being even larger at the New York banks. The rise is attributed chiefly to the demand for funds in connection with payments on British bond subscriptions. Other discounts fell off about $29,000,000, and, while exceptions are noted, the Cleveland, Chicago, and St. Louis banks reporting large increases in their acceptance holdings as a result of purchases from other banks, while the acceptance holdings of the New York bank declined about $31,000,000.

On the other hand, the amount of paper held under rediscount for other banks (all held by the Chicago bank) shows a decline from $28,900,000 to $17,300,000. Treasury certificates on hand declined $1,100,000, though the circulation of Federal Reserve Bank notes, which are largely secured by these certificates, went up about $2,600,000.

As against a decrease of $58,000,000 in Government deposits, the statement indicates increases of $73,400,000 in reserve deposits and of $16,550,000 in the "float" carried by the banks. As a result net deposits show an increase of about $20,000,000.

The week saw a further decline of $18,400,000 in gold reserves, of $18,200,000 in total cash reserves, and an increase of $58,906,000 in Federal Reserve note circulation.

The bank's reserve ratio shows a decline of from 47.9 to 46.8 per cent.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 9,666 packages. Slightly easier feeling in some quarters and concessions of ½c were made on some grades of fresh creamery, but most receivers felt disposed to try out the situation a little more fully before yielding to the demand for lower prices, so that values are very much the same as reported of late. No change in renovated, ladies or packing stock; market firm. Creamery, higher than extras, a lb., 70@70½c; extras, 92 score, 68@69½c; firsts, 88 to 91 score, 63@68½c; seconds, 83 to 87 score, 55@58½c; lower grades, 52@54c; held, higher than extras, 66½@67c; extras, 65½@66c; firsts, 60@65c; seconds, 53@59c; unsalted, higher than extras, 72½@73½c; extras, 71½@72c; firsts, 64@70c; seconds, 58@62c; State dairy tubs, finest, 66@67c; good to prime, 60@65c; common to fair, 52@58c; renovated extras, 57@57½c; ladies; current make, firsts, 49½@50½c; seconds, 48@48½c; lower grades, 46@47½c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 48c; No. 2, 47c; lower grades, 44@46½c.

EGGS.—6,230 cases. The week closes with a pretty good clearance of the highest qualities of fresh gathered eggs containing a large proportion of full strong-bodied stock; these are rated firm and there has been a little better movement of the good medium qualities. More seriously defective fresh, consisting mostly of held stock are still meeting a dull market and are in large accumulation. High-grade storage eggs firm; other qualities are freely offered, but the range of values is without change. Fancy California white eggs last received are held at $1 and some sales reported at that price. Highest qualities of nearby stock are salable at the same figure, but most of the receipts are more or less defective and have a wide range of lower values. Fresh gathered extras, a dozen, 70@71c; extra firsts, 66c@69c; firsts, 61@65c; seconds, 55@60c; under grades, 45@54c; dirties, No. 1, 50@52c; No. 2 and poorer, 45@49c; checks, good to choice, dry, 42@45c; under grades, 36@41c; refrigerator special marks, fancy, charges paid, 53@54c; firsts, 51½@52½c; seconds, 47@51c; under grades, 36@46c; State, Pennsylvania and nearby Western, hennery whites, fine to fancy, 95c@$1; fair to prime, 75@94c; gathered whites, common to prime, 70@96c; pullets, 65@75c; Pacific Coast, whites, express, fancy, 89c@$1; other Western and Southern, gathered whites, 63@90c; State, Pennsylvania and nearby, hennery browns, fancy, 76@78c; gathered brown and mixed colors, graded, fancy, 70@72c; fair to prime, 63@60c.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The western disturbance of Friday is central tonight in marked form over Eastern New Mexico, the general depression covering Kansas and the Southwestern States. Elsewhere pressure remains high, decidedly so over the northern portion of the country, but with cloudy weather persisting throughout the country except in the Middle Atlantic States, Montana, Nevada, and the Pacific States. There were general snows in the Northwest and the Rocky Mountain region and Utah, heavy in some places, and rains in the Central Plains States and the Southwest and light local rains in the Gulf States, but no other precipitation of consequence.

Temperatures remain nearly normal from the Plains States eastward, while to the westward they are much below normal, with a decided fall since Friday night in the Rocky Mountain region and the extreme Southwest.

There will be rain Sunday and Monday in the Southern States and the Ohio Valley and rain or snow in the upper lake region, extending Monday or Monday night throughout the lake region into the Middle Atlantic States. In New England fair weather Sunday will be followed by increased cloudiness Monday.

It will be warmer in the upper lake region, the lower Ohio Valley, Tennessee, and the East Gulf States, while to the eastward temperatures will change but little.

Winds off Atlantic Coast: North of Sandy Hook, moderate north and northeast winds, fair weather. Sandy Hook to Hatteras, moderate northeast winds; fair Sunday, probably rain Monday. Hatteras to Florida Straits, moderate to fresh northeast winds; cloudy Sunday, rain Monday. East Gulf Coast, moderate east winds over north portion, with rain; moderate northeast winds over south portion, with cloudy weather. West Gulf Coast, moderate to fresh southeast to south winds Sunday, shifting to northwest Monday, over north portion, with rain. Marked disturbance over Eastern New Mexico, moving slowly east.

MAPS OUT TUNNEL TO STATEN ISLAND

Commissioner Delaney Now Has Engineers at Work on the Surveys and Plans.

AT VARIANCE OVER ROUTES

Some Want Terminus at Battery, While Others Hold Out for Line to Brooklyn.

COST MAY BE VITAL FACTOR

Shorter Tunnel Can Be Built for $8,000,000 Less, According to Present Estimates.

It was learned yesterday from an authoritative source that the City Administration had decided to build a tunnel to Staten Island, that surveys, maps, and plans are now being made by engineers under the direction of John H. Delaney, Transit Construction Commissioner, and that the actual work of constructing the tunnel would begin in the coming year. The most important question to be decided now is the route.

Public hearings will be held by Commissioner Delaney to obtain the consensus of opinion as to whether the tunnel should connect with the Fourth Avenue subway in Brooklyn and extend to St. George, Staten Island, from a point at Sixty-fifth Street, Brooklyn, or whether it should connect with the Interborough subway at the Battery.

So far as could be discovered, the city officials favor the Brooklyn connection, and the reason given is that the distance is only about two miles, in comparison with the five miles from the Battery to St. George. It was explained that a tunnel could be built under the shorter stretch of water for about $12,000,000, which is something like $8,000,000 more than the estimates made before the war; that a tunnel from the Battery to Staten Island would cost about $20,000,000, and that the long trip, where no passengers could be picked up, would mean a heavy loss in traffic.

It was said that the lack of money might delay the actual beginning of the work, after the route had been decided upon, for six or nine months, but that every city official was keenly interested in the enterprise. With a tunnel operating from Richmond Borough, it was said, past inconveniences from strike of ferry and longshore workers would be wiped out, supplies could be brought to all points of the city from the New Jersey shore in case of need, and the residents of Staten Island would not again be marooned because of a strike of the ferry hands.

In explaining why the work may be delayed because of lack of money a city official said:

"The city will need $30,000,000 next year to carry on the work of building parts of the dual rapid transit system, and another $30,000,000 will be needed in 1921. About $10,000,000 more may be spent before the system is complete. I do not know just how near the city is to the debt limit, but I am sure that the money to connect Staten Island with the other parts of the city must be found because it has become a pressing need."

Staten Island Favors Direct Route.

The Staten Island Subway Committee, which has been urging a tunnel connection with Manhattan instead of with Brooklyn, strenuously objects to the attitude of those city officials who want the proposed tunnel connected with the subways operated by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, instead of those operated by the Interborough Company. William Wirt Mills, Secretary of the committee, said:

"The question is one of routes. The people of Staten Island have very definite wishes on this point, and the Subway Committee has decided that the people want a subway direct from Manhattan to and through Staten Island. In all other subway extensions the borough most directly concerned has been consulted, and it should be so in this case. The people of Staten Island want the direct route because it is the only one that offers rapid transit. A roundabout route through Brooklyn could not compete in running time with the Municipal Ferry. Therefore it would not be used extensively and would be unprofitable. Such a subway would be a bad economic proposition."

During controversies on the subject representatives of Staten Island have been asked whether the people of Richmond would rather have no subway at all than one to Brooklyn. They objected to the question as being unfair, but Mr. Mills answered the question in this way:

"For myself, with my knowledge of the facts, I would answer, both in the interests of Staten Island and in the interests of the city at large, that it would be better to depend upon the ferry alone than to sink untold millions in the futile experiment of piercing the vast bed of silt under the channel with tubes that could never be safely founded on bedrock, and that, if built after years of costly experimentation, would lead only into a congested system and reach the heart of the city only by a long, roundabout route leading through six throttles that would dam up the traffic and make Staten Island more remote in point of time than it is now with its ferry service."

It was said that the tunnel project had been held up because of an attempt to join with it a freight-carrying plan which the people of Staten Island do not want. But residents of other sections, not so interested in the development of the island, are anxious for the freight idea to succeed. Transit Commissioner John H. Delaney, asked about the matter, replied that as he was engaged in getting the plans and maps ready for submission to the Board of Estimate and was thinking about setting dates for public hearings on the matter, he could not discuss the subject.

COOLIDGE'S VICTORY HELPS HARVARD FUND

Committee Bespeaks a Few Football Successes as a Further Aid—Boston Still Leads.

The re-election of Governor Coolidge in Massachusetts on a "law and order" platform has speeded up the work of gathering the fund of $15,250,000 to be used in increasing the pay of Harvard professors, according to an announcement yesterday by the Harvard Endowment Fund. Harvard students assisted in policing Boston during the policemen's strike and campaigned for the re-election of Governor Coolidge. Members of the committee said they believed the campaign would be speeded further by a few football victories.

Boston still leads in the amount of contributions to the fund, but her lead has been cut by the steady work of the Women's Committee in this city. It was announced yesterday that the total of subscriptions for this committee was $405,015, the largest total reported by any of the forty-four committees here. Second to the Women's Committee is the team of George Whitney, with $270,222.

In the race for the record for the largest number of individual subscribers the Harvard Club team leads here, with the teams of Thomas W. Slocum and Frederick M. Warburg close behind.

TO VISIT STRASBOURG.

Dr. W. T. Bush to Represent Columbia at French University Inaugural.

The program for the inauguration ceremonies to be held at the University of Strasbourg Nov. 21, 22, and 23 has just been received in this country, it was announced at Columbia University last night. Dr. Wendell T. Bush, Associate Professor of Philosophy, will represent Columbia at the ceremonies, at which President Poincaré and the French Minister of Public Instruction will be present.

Dr. Bush sailed for Europe yesterday. He will be one of the group of scholars from all over the world who will journey to Strasbourg to take part in the inauguration of the new régime at that institution.

The event comes on the first anniversary of the triumphant entrance of the French troops into Strasbourg and the wresting of the historic university from German control. The French Government will play an active part in the inauguration ceremonies, which are to mark a day of rejoicing throughout the French Republic.

The ceremonies begin on Nov. 21. The ceremony of inauguration will take place on Nov. 22 at 9:30 A. M. at the palace of the university, and will be followed at 11:30 by military ceremonies. M. Poincaré will preside at a meeting of the students of the University of Strasbourg and the visiting professors at 5 o'clock. A gala performance will be staged at the theatre at 9 P. M.

WAR CHANCE FOR AVIATORS.

Major Paul Baer Organizing Squadron for Service in Poland.

Major Paul Baer, an American ace, who went to Poland several months ago at the request of Premier Paderewski to organize the neucleus of an air service to serve with the Polish forces, has returned to the United States to interest aviators here in enlisting in the service of Poland. He said that there was a wonderful opportunity in Poland for a fearless pilot who liked adventure in a good cause.

"Poland has 800,000 men in uniform, who have sworn to regain their lost provinces and to maintain their new national independence against all foes," said Major Baer. "On their battlefront they are fighting not only Bolshevists, but Germans in Russian uniforms. You must know that Germany has refused to give up certain territory she now holds until the United States ratifies the Peace Treaty.

"I have been authorized to take to Poland in about a month the premier organization of their air service. We must have at least fifteen first-class pilots and twenty-five or thirty expert mechanics. Airplanes, too, will be needed, though just where these will be secured has not yet been decided."

Major Baer is making his headquarters at the American Flying Club.

PLAN HOTEL FOR 250 GIRLS.

Federation of Women's Clubs Undertake Big Project.

As a result of an appeal made by forty young business women to the convention of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs last week, for aid in finding places to live, the federation will take steps immediately to obtain a hotel which will accommodate at least 250 girls. This will be done through the committee in charge of the present City Federation Hotel for Working Girls, of which Mrs. Eleanor B. Glogau is President.

"The girls who appealed to us," said Mrs. Glogau yesterday, "are among the 250 who had to leave the Trowmat Inn in Abingdon Square in 1917, when that building was taken over by the Government. Our own hotel at 325 West Twenty-second Street, will accommodate only fifty girls, and we have a long waiting list. The larger hotel we have, the lower will be the per capita expense of running it.

"We will set about raising the money for the new hotel immediately, beginning through our seventy auxiliary clubs whose members each pay $1 a year for the support of the hotel. There are about 325 clubs belonging to the federation, and if each would become an auxiliary, our opportunities would be greatly broadened. We shall try to reach club women in all parts of the city, for there is no more important work that can be done than finding places where women who work may live at reasonable rates, and we hope to raise the money in a short time."

OPENS DOORS TO WOMEN.

First Class Admitted to New York University Medical School.

Twenty women have been enrolled in the Medical College of New York University, for the first time in its history, according to an announcement made by Dean Samuel A. Brown of the medical faculty. These women will have equal privileges with the men, attending the same classes, working in the same laboratories and clinics, and receiving their degrees after completion of the same curriculum of study.

"Since the recent international conference of women physicians held in New York," said Dean Brown, "the question of how the medical profession is attracting women to its ranks has been endlessly repeated. Extreme interest is attached to the fact that the doors of the medical college of New York University were opened to women. The answer to that question was given by the immediate admission of a score of women, although little has been said in advance of the innovation in our policy."

The College for Physicians is located at Twenty-sixth Street and First Avenue, thus giving the students the opportunity to deal with the health problems of a great city by the proximity to Bellevue Hospital, the largest public hospital in the world. Heretofore men students were privileged to attend the clinic at the public hospital and assist the attending physicians with the lesser duties of the dispensaries. With the advent of women students, they too, will be included in these extramural courses.

CHANGE IN CLIMATE KILLING PARK TREES

There Has Been a Decided Decrease in Rainfall and Humidity Here in Five Years.

HAVOC IN CENTRAL PARK

Record Cold Killed 4,000, but Poor Soil is Chief Cause of Loss—Suggestions for Restoration.

New York's climate has changed considerably in the last twenty years, and that is one of the reasons for the wholesale death of trees in Central Park, according to Charles Lathrop Pack, President of the American Forestry Association, who has written in the current issue of American Forestry an extended review of the causes of tree failure in Central Park, based on the study of two expert foresters engaged by the association. On the changes in New York City's weather in the last twenty years they reached these conclusions:

1. There has been a decided decrease in rainfall.
2. Much of this decrease has been in the Summer months, when needed most.
3. There has been a decided decrease in relative humidity in the last five years.
4. There has been an increase in the wind movement in the last five years.
5. The trees have been subjected to a very severe frost in the Winter of 1917-18.

The main cause of the death of thousands of trees and the anaemic condition of others, however, is not the climatic changes, but the shallowness and poor condition of the soil. While the young trees could live in this soil, their roots have lacked room and have found such a scant water supply in the soil that they could not take in the sustenance necessary to keep trees alive after reaching maturity.

The death of these trees is laid to politics and misgovernment—in this respect, that the political appointees who have presided over the parks in the past lacked the technical knowledge and interest in forestry which should have caused them to discover and deal with these evils, before they began to lay low thousands of the trees that make the beauty of the park.

Efforts to Improve Conditions.

Mr. Pack approves of the work undertaken by the present Park Commission, Francis D. Gallatin, in subsoil dynamiting to break up clay structures, which stop the growth of roots, but asserts that the situation requires the planting on a large scale of trees found most suited to conditions in the park.

On the relative power of the different types of tree to live in the park, Mr. Pack says:

"Under the head of species especially sensitive to the Central Park conditions they have found the elm, beech, red maple, and linden.

"Trees which will make a fair growth in Central Park under specially favorable conditions they have found to be tulip, pin oak, and white ash.

"Trees that have demonstrated their ability to do really well in many sections of the park they have found to be cottonwood, English oak, red oak, scarlet oak, and sycamore.

"For practically any sites in the park, even the unfavorable places, either the ailanthus or gingko can be always counted upon.

"The cucumber, Norway maple, and catalpa will all grew splendidly when on their proper sites in the park. Off their proper sites, they will not do so well."

There were 60,000 trees in the park. During the unprecedented cold of the first few days of 1918 more than 4,000 of them were killed. Others, which were weak because of soil conditions, have since died, and thousands are showing life only in a feeble degree. The conclusions of the experts on the restoration of tree life in the park are cited as follows by Mr. Pack:

What Trees to Plant.

1. Selection of only such species of trees 'for' planting as have proved either entirely hardy under present conditions or at least have done well on certain special sites in the park. This, of course, applies only to the planting of trees on a large scale, specimens of arboricultural interest being entirely another matter.

2. Special attention to the establishment and maintenance of proper surface soil conditions under the trees. It is the soil-moisture conditions of the trees which is the one great thing to watch out for in dealing with trees anywhere, and especially in a park where the trees are planted singly and are exposed to severe drying conditions of the surface soil around them. The establishment and maintenance of proper conditions for preserving soil-moisture in Central Park might entail:

(a) Cultivation of soil around all trees of special interest or value, and the more the better.

(b) Mulching or covering the soil about the trees with manure, dead leaves, &c., during the Winter.

(c) Planting trees in small groves or "woodlets" and keeping them in the form of small patches of natural forest, (leaving the leaves and small twigs to decay on the ground and so form a natural mulch.)

(d) Underplanting the larger trees with more shade-enduring species which would shade the ground, protect from wind, and so prevent drying out.

Need Justifies the Cost.

"These suggestions would perhaps cost a great deal of money or a change in the principal present-day policy of the park management, but is not the end worthy of such expense and change?" says Mr. Pack.

"To one passing through the park on any bright day in the warmer months the value of human life—especially child life—of the open, outdoor stretches of natural growth, so different from the narrow, dirty, noisy streets in which most of the park visitors were born and now live, is ample to warrant a great increase in expenditure by the city to save and energetically maintain the tree growth within this, the most famous of all American city parks.

"At the present time and under the present system many of the trees of the park are much retarded in growth and a large number have died. Some of these latter have been of large size and fair age, but it is clear to the careful observer that practically all of them should have lived for a good many years longer, and there is good reason to believe that if proper care and enough money had been devoted to them they would still be shading the walks and lawns instead of going to the woodpile. Now, when too late, the trees are dead, and the expense of taking them out and planting new ones comes up, while the public waits for years for the new tree to attain good enough proportions to fill the blank left by the dead specimen.

"The situation confronting New York as a result of these findings will, perhaps, fit many other cities in the United States. We have all seen beautiful trees just [illegible] and the layman is at a [illegible] to understand why they should. The New [illegible] officials are alive to the situation and are trying to improve it. [illegible] of just what [illegible]st suited to Central Park conditions is of the utmost value to every city forester and Park Department official."

Dinner for Prince of Wales' Grandfather, Which Cost $10, Would Cost $30 Now

With the coming visit of Prince Edward of Wales to this city interest has been aroused in a comparison of the time his grandfather, later Edward VII. of England, was a guest of the city fifty-nine years ago. Among other things that the present Edward is going to find different from the time of his grandfather is the advance in the cost of living, which is graphically shown in a menu of a dinner given to the former Edward at the Hotel Brevoort on Nov. 7, 1860.

A copy of that menu now hangs on the walls of the hotel, and the dinner, according to the management, cost $10, including wines. At that time it was considered an extravagantly expensive meal, but a comparison with the present makes it look more like the food prepared for a free lunch than a dinner tendered to the official representative of a great nation.

Here is a sample of the menu with past and present prices, as furnished by the Hotel Brevoort:

Courses.	1860 Price.	1919 Price.
Oysters on half shell	$.20	$.45
Soup, (cream of chicken)	.20	.50
Hors d'oeuvres	.25	.65
Filet of trout	.45	.75
Leg of lamb	.55	1.00
Roast turkey	.60	1.25
Entrees	.70	1.50
Vegetables, (4 kinds)	1.60	3.00
Canvasback duck	.75	1.00
Salad	.30	.60
Dessert	.30	.75

The total for food alone in one case is $6 and in the other $10. In 1860 the wines at the meal included Amontillado sherry, Château Yquem, Roderer champagne, Château Latour claret, and liqueurs. As was pointed out yesterday, it is obviously impossible at the present time to have wine at any public function where the Prince attends. However, if the ban should be lifted in time, and the above wines appear, it was said the total price would be nearer $30 than $10.

NIXON DISAVOWS HYLAN'S BUS LINES

Public Service Commissioner Declares Vehicles Are Operating Contrary to Law.

PROTESTS FROM 86TH ST.

Flatbush Citizens Run Free Automobiles Over Second Fare Trolley Zone.

The several accidents that have occurred on the bus lines established by Mayor Hylan induced Public Service Commissioner Lewis Nixon to issue a statement yesterday stating his position in the matter. Mr. Nixon explained that it appeared to be necessary for the commission to clear its skirts of any responsibility for the buses, and to make it clear that the commission was well aware that the buses were operating without proper authority, but that it did not want to interfere as long as the buses served a public need.

"For months now buses have been running in direct violation of law," the statement says. "This commission has no police power, but when accidents begin the question of proper service demands that this commission so clear its skirts that it may avoid being an accessory.

"Doubtless steps could be taken to stop the buses until legal requirements had been complied with, but I did not propose having the City Government say that I was the one who stopped them.

"Instead, I preferred to have the experiment run its course, and saw no reason why I should pull the chestnuts out of the fire for them. If a private car runs without a State license it is held up by the police. So a letter was written to the Police Commissioner asking him to tell me by what authority such duty is set aside in the matter of buses when transgression is flagrant.

"Possibly there is an impression that bus lines run by the city, and in part at the expense of the people, paying no licenses or taxes, irresponsible as to injuries and placed on routes at will, are not subject to regulation by this commission. We shall keep in touch with the situation and see that responsibility is fixed. Again I say that if buses are of real service, and can be regulated in the public interest, they will receive every possible support by this commission.

"The management so far is running true to form. Like master, like man, seems to produce rather impudent refusal to recognize any regulation other than the sweet will of some agent whose temporary exercise of power causes an inflated sense of importance."

The last paragraph of Mr. Nixon's statement is directed at Grover Whalen, Commissioner of Plant and Structures, who advised Mr. Nixon on Friday to stop raising obstacles in the paths of the buses and to turn his attention to helping the people.

Operation of the bus line through Eighty-sixth Street has aroused resentment on the part of residents on the west side. To appease the residents of Riverside Drive, the first terminal of the line, the terminal was moved east to West End Avenue. Several years ago, when it was suggested that the Eighty-sixth Street crosstown car line should be extended to the Hudson River, there was so strong a protest that the idea was abandoned. It was said yesterday that a protest might be filed with the Board of Estimate against the bus line.

H. Hobart Porter, General Manager of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company, issued a statement yesterday to the effect that the trouble growing out of the double-fare charge on Flatbush Avenue had passed and that the situation had been accepted by the public.

Public Service Commissioner Lewis Nixon is to decide this week whether an order shall be issued directing the company not to charge two fares for a continuous ride. If the order is issued, the company will carry the question into the courts.

Yesterday afternoon and evening automobiles owned by members of the Flatbush Chamber of Commerce gave free rides to as many as could be accommodated to and from the one-fare zone. The experiment was so successful that there was talk of establishing a bus line tomorrow to operate through Flatlands and Flatbush to the Atlantic Avenue Station and Borough Hall.

A dog which had daily escorted his master to a Flatbush Avenue car got confused yesterday because the man walked to the one-fare zone and tried to leave his dog at an unusual point. The dog resisted and sought to board the car. Ejected, he hung around and essayed to board every other car that came along. He was still boarding cars and getting kicked off late in the afternoon. That was the only disturbance on the line during the day.

The Public Service Commission will hold hearings tomorrow on applications of the New York City Interborough Railway Company for permission to abandon the operation of part of its lines on Hunts Point, Leggett, and Randall Avenues. The hearing in relation to the service and equipment of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company will be continued in the afternoon. On Thursday the commission will hold a hearing in relation to new tariffs increasing the fare on the New York, Westchester & Boston Railway, a subsidiary of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company.

OUR WORRIES FEWER THAN ENGLISHMEN'S

Visiting Briton Throws Light on the Way His Countrymen Are Hit by the Income Tax.

CHANGES HERE IN 12 YEARS

Two Stand Out, the Vastly Increased Traffic and the Decreased Buying Power of the Dollar.

The changes that have taken place in New York City during the last few years have deeply impressed John Cowley, a director in a well-known London business firm, who has been stopping for a month at the Hotel Knickerbocker studying industrial and financial conditions here. In commenting upon his observations yesterday, Mr. Cowley said:

"It is twelve years since I was last in New York, and great a change as I expected to find, the alterations are beyond anything I anticipated. Two changes stand out more than any others. The first is the vastly increased traffic and the changed business centre. The second is the decreased buying power of the dollar.

"The latter is, of course, the more important, inasmuch as it affects the pocket of every person here. Twelve years ago, the cost of my stay in New York was only about one-half that with which I am now confronted. Every item of daily expenditure, with perhaps the solitary exception of subway fare, seems to have doubled. There is no doubt that the cause of so much labor unrest here is mainly due to the higher cost of living.

"Whether the increased cost," Mr. Cowley continued, "is partly due to profiteering on the part of manufacturers and retailers I do not profess to know, but it is certain that in Great Britain, where the cost of living, clothing, and housing has been also raised enormously, much of it has been due to this.

"As is probably the case here, the Government in Britain has instituted courts of inquiry into cases where profiteering is alleged, and it is hoped that these investigations will mean the stoppage of increasing prices, and, in the cases of certain articles, reduction in price.

"Since I have arrived in this country I have met several friends who have complained about their altered financial position, attributable to the war conditions. Not only do they grumble about the highly increased cost of living, but also in regard to taxation and the excess profits tax. I do not know what your income tax is, or what amount your excess profits tax is, but it would no doubt be of interest to give an idea of what taxation and high costs have meant to many people in Britain.

In 1914 the English sovereign was worth 20 shillings, nearly $5. Today the purchasing power of the sovereign is less than half that amount. Now, in this connection I will instance a case showing how war taxation in Britain has hit tens of thousands of retired, pensioned, and independent people, who prior to 1914 considered themselves financially well off for life.

"Take the case of a business man who retired at 60 years of age on an annual income of £500, or nearly $2,500. Before the war that income would be subject to an income tax of 1s. 2d, about 28 cents in the pound, which would leave him £470 to live upon very comfortably when the sovereign was worth 20s.

"What is that man's position today? The tax upon that £500, which is termed unearned income, would reduce it to about £350, which would have a spending value of only half this amount, or £175.

"This is a point," said Mr. Cowley, "which the American people should not overlook. Much as the war has changed the value of the dollar here and made the income tax a subject to grumble about, I do not think that the American people yet appreciate how heavily the effects of the war have laid their hands on the British people. There have been many cases in Britain where men in the position described have been driven to give up their homes and remove their furniture to less pretentious quarters and live much more meagrely."

Mr. Cowley will visit some of the principal cities in the Eastern States before returning to England in the Cunarder Mauretania on Nov. 29.

TO CELEBRATE ARMISTICE.

Three Big Dances Arranged for Veterans Tuesday Night.

Members of the American Legion, other veterans of the war, and the families of all are to make merry Tuesday night, the first anniversary of the armistice.

Through the agency of the New York War Camp Community Service there will be three big dances in Manhattan and Brooklyn for the men, at which 7,500 service men and as many dancing partners for them are expected.

The parties in New York will be at the Waldorf-Astoria and the 71st Regiment Armory. The ball at the hotel is given by the Missouri Committee of the Hall of States, but representatives of all States are co-operating. Five thousand persons are expected there. A Khaki and Blue dance will be held at the armory, and in Brooklyn the legion and the community service will hold a dance at the 23d Regiment Armory.

Men who fought through the Argonne and other battles in which Company D, 308th Infantry, took part will hold their first reunion Saturday night at the 22d Regiment Armory, 168th Street and Washington Avenue. Sergeant Bill Tighe of Company D is organizing the party, and all former members of the company are asked to send their names to him at 55 West 105th Street. The casualties of the company were among the highest in the A. E. F. Captain Paul R. Knight, Lieut. Col. Charles W. Whittlesey of the "Lost Battalion," Colonel N. K. Averill, and others will attend.

TAFT URGES TREATY WITH RESERVATIONS

Accept Them and Get Votes Enough to Save League, He Advises.

DECRIES OFFENSIVE TONE

If They Were Framed in More Courteous Terms Other Nations Would More Readily Acquiesce.

Admitting that the friends of the Peace Treaty and the League covenant could not muster votes enough to pass the document intact, former President Taft in Carnegie Hall yesterday told 3,000 members of the League for Political Education at its opening meeting that reservations would have to be accepted.

"The League of Nations is in a crucial condition," he said earnestly, "and the question is, what are we going to do with it? I yield to no man in my desire to have the league ratified. If I were in the Senate I would vote for it without reservation—just as it is, but"—he paused and laughed—"of course, if you can't get all you want, it is better to take what you can get."

Mr. Taft added that in his opinion it would "be a fatal step" for the Democratic minority to cling to its non reservation policy, and thus court the danger of a rejection of the treaty. He indicated that he believed the Democratic Senators, and the President, would come to the point where they would accept reservations and save the treaty.

"The league is the big thing," he declared, "it is the league we need and want, and a Peace Treaty that contained the league, even with reservations, would be a great initial step forward."

Mr. Taft rejected the theory that the League came into being as an academic fad of Mr. Wilson or anybody else; it came about because of the unanimous demand of the peoples of the world, heartsick of war." He added that even if the League were rejected the discussions that have been had on it would have an educating effect.

Glad Amendments Are Beaten.

"The Foreign Relations Committee, which contains a majority of members opposed to the League," said Mr. Taft, "has formulated fourteen reservations. After a long, hard fight all the amendments have been defeated, thank Heaven! The treaty remains unchanged as to the obligations of other nations."

He then took up the reservation offered by Senator Reed of Missouri, "a bitter-ender." The former President said that Reed's reservation would "make the United States a mere visitor to the Council of the League of Nations," but that "reports from Washington indicate that his reservation will be defeated."

"Of the other thirteen reservations," he continued, "it may be said that they are to be considered from two points of view. First, do they so destroy the useful effect of the United States membership in the League as to make it better for her not to join the League at all? Second, are they of such a character that the other nations are not likely to acquiesce in them and allow the United States to limit its obligations as they seem to do?

"I have studied them with as much attention as I could give to them in a busy time. Speaking of them in general, I think they might accomplish exactly the same limitation upon the obligations of the United States if they were couched in a more courteous, more diplomatic, and less offensive tone. This would increase the probability that the other nations would acquiesce in them. It is to be hoped that in the discussion in the Senate this consideration will have weight and there may be a modification of their form.

"The first reservation is in effect that when the United States seeks to withdraw under the privilege given to any nation to withdraw upon two years' notice, after having fulfilled its international and League obligations, it shall be considered to have decided that its obligations have been fulfilled.

Fulfillment of Obligations.

"This is a justified construction of the withdrawal clause. There are no tribunals of the League set up to pass on such a question as the fulfillment of obligations. Therefore, each nation must in good conscience decide whether its obligations have been fulfilled. The reservation is, therefore, merely interpretative, and though unnecessary, is unobjectionable. This is true, too, of the fourth reservation, as to the exclusion of domestic subjects, like tariff, immigration, labor, and kindred matters, from the jurisdiction of the League tribunals.

"The fifth reservation," he said, "as to the Monroe Doctrine, while I don't like it in its present form, is interpretative and if acquiesced in by the other nations will not interfere with the useful operation of the League. I believe it to be—the Monroe Doctrine—a profoundly good doctrine, properly applied. We ought not to be afraid to place it before the world, therefore."

Speaking of Article X., which deals with the sending of American military forces to foreign territory, Mr. Taft said that the reservation concerning it had been "considerably improved through the insistence of the mild reservationists, so-called." He admitted that "the fear that we might be obliged to send forces to remote parts of the earth," had led "to conscientious objection to this Article among a good many who genuinely favor the League." Even, he declared, if modification weakened the force of Article X., "all the teeth would not be drawn" from the League's means of "keeping the international highways free of robbers," for it must be remembered that one of the great agencies to accomplish the same purpose as Article X. would be the universal boycott, required under Article XVI., because war begun in violation of Article X. would generally be begun in violation of Article XVI. No nation could last three months, with the exception of the United States and Argentina, under a universal boycott. There is nothing in the reservation now proposed that embarrasses the operation of the universal boycott.

"It is perfectly manifest that the friends of the treaty can not get sixty-four votes for it unless they consent to some such reservation as this in respect to Article X. The mild reservationists in the Senate have agreed with the other Republicans that they will support this reservation, and by a majority vote they will thus be able to adopt it in the resolution of ratification.

"Ought we not then urge that the Democrats who are in favor of the League, unless they can secure modification, should consent to such a reservation, not because they like it, but because they must consent to it in order to secure the League. That is my judgment. If we cannot get a whole loaf, we ought to take part of it, especially when the part of it is of such transcendent value and importance in the movement toward the regulation of the peace of the world by a union of nations."

HANSON SEES A. F. OF L. IMPERILED BY 'REDS'

Tells Gompers Labor Must Purge Its Ranks of Radicals or American People Will.

The American Federation of Labor is in danger of "being turned over, lock, stock, and barrel," to the Reds, according to Ole Hanson, former Mayor of Seattle, who yesterday issued a statement attacking Samuel Gompers, its President.

The statement, wired from Cleveland to "Ole Hanson Headquarters" in the Waldorf-Astoria, was in reply to Mr. Gompers's declaration that there were no "Reds" in the labor organization.

"I note that Samuel Gompers has said that 'Reds' are not influencing the American Federation of Labor," telegraphed Mr. Hanson, "and that I talk too much; that I know little of labor conditions; that the coal miners' demands are conservative, and that unrest is necessary.

"The 'Reds' are influencing the federation—there are nearly 300 strikes, and 90 per cent. of these are lawless strikes, called in spite of the wishes of Mr. Gompers. The 'Reds' are influencing the organization, and they are apparently winning Mr. Gompers away from his conservative stand of the past.

"Who is Foster but a 'Red'? What was found in Gary, Ind., by General Wood? What circulars and propaganda are being distributed in federation halls? As to his statement that I am talking too much—Well, probably I am talking too much to suit the men who control the Soviet which is trying to run this country. I would rather talk too much than keep a cowardly silence.

"You say that unrest is necessary. It surely is if the labor agitator and labor exploiter are to continue to live without working. No unrest—no job.

"You said a few days ago in a published statement that you would cooperate with me in driving out the 'Reds' in your organization. Now you say there are no 'Reds.' You know there are 'Reds' and plenty of them, and you know just what they are doing and what they are trying to do. The American Federation must either drive out the 'Reds' or they will be cleaned out by the American people.

"As to your attack on me, I care nothing. I realize that you are old and feeble, and as the body weakens so does the mind."

Mr. Hanson and Mr. Gompers have been friends for years, it was said at the Hanson headquarters, and yesterday's announcement was the first break that has occurred between them.

During the convention of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., to be held in Detroit Nov. 19 to 23, six Secretaries of that organization will receive the French War Cross for courage under fire. The honors were awarded by Marshal Pétain.

Those who won the honor are Richard G. Shreve, 27 Bondman Street, Rochester; Carl D. Lytle, North Brookfield, Mass.; the Rev. J. Mandeville Barker, Uniontown, Penn.; Thomas W. Wilber, New Britain, Conn.; W. R. Farmer, Pittsburgh, Penn., and the Rev. Mercer G. Johnson, Baltimore.

SMITH TO AID RED CROSS.

Governor Becomes Chairman of Christmas Seal Drive.

Governor Alfred E. Smith yesterday accepted the Chairmanship of the State Campaign Committee for this year's sale of Red Cross Christmas seals, it was announced at city headquarters, 145 West Forty-seventh Street, yesterday. Dr. Hermann M. Biggs, State Commissioner of Health, will be Vice Chairman and Homer Folks Secretary.

In accepting the Chairmanship Governor Smith called on all citizens to assist in promoting the campaign, which is designed to aid the fight against tuberculosis.

Deaths from tuberculosis in New York City last year totaled 10,097, and there are more than 29,000 registered active cases of the disease in the city now.

AID POLIOMYELITIS CASES.

New York Committee Reports 8,253 Patients Assisted—Many Cured.

All the child victims who survived the infantile paralysis epidemic of two years ago and who have had regular after care have shown great improvement, and many of them have been permanently cured, according to the annual report of the New York Committee on After Care of Infantile Paralysis Cases made public yesterday.

In its report the Executive Committee, 289 Fourth Avenue, reported that during the year just ended the committee took care of 8,253 cases. It finds, however, that there is still a great deal to be done, and a survey now under way indicates the necessity of complete records of cripples, additional clinics, increased means for transportation, and the development of field agencies to help those in need of orthopedic assistance.

The Trustees of the Fund are William Church Osborn, John T. Pratt, Robert W. de Forest, Alfred T. White, Dr. Thomas J. Riley, H. T. Johansen, and Robert Stuart.

FRANCE TO HONOR OUR DEAD

Relatives of the Fallen to Receive Memorial Diploma.

The French High Commission recently sent to America will present to the next kin of American soldiers who died in the service during the war a memorial diploma bearing the signature of President Poincaré. The memorial is a work of art, the principal figure of the group symbolizing the soul and spirit of the American Army.

The sword is ready to protect and defend the weak and oppressed, who are symbolized in a group to the left by a mother holding her baby to her breast, and to insure freedom and justice to coming generations, represented by the figure of a kneeling boy, praying for deliverance. At the right a man, chained and shackled, symbolizes the spirit of evil and the victory over our enemies. Also at the right, crowning the spirit of America, stands "Glory," who rejoices with the old war veteran standing to the left of the principal figure, symbolizing the armies. Universal fame is symbolized by a winged figure flying over the group. The American eagle is posed on the staff of peace. At the foot of the cenotaph the flags of France and America are draped and joined together by a wreath.

KENYON FINDS REDS HEAD STEEL STRIKE

Says Foster and Margolis Are Dangerous to Nation, in Report to Senate of Inquiry.

GOMPERS ALSO CENSURED

Asserts Recent Activities Have Cost Federation of Labor Much Public Good-Will.

ASKS NEW LEGISLATION

Urges Board to Investigate Industrial Disputes and Americanization of Alien Workers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—That the American Federation of Labor has lost much of the favorable public opinion it has hitherto enjoyed as a result of the recent strike activities of the organization and that radical elements are now seeking to gain a commanding influence in the Federation through the "boring from within" process is the finding of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in its investigation of the nation-wide steel strike reported to the Senate today by Senator Kenyon. The committee does not, however, find the United States Steel Corporation blameless in the controversy, and holds that the complaints of the workers regarding working hours, and, to a certain extent, the collective bargaining principle are justified.

The principal part of the report, however, deals with the Red element that has been operating from within the Federation of Labor, and the committee asserts that "behind this strike there is massed a considerable element of I. W. W.'s, anarchists, revolutionists, and Russian Sovietists," and that "some radicals not in harmony with the conservative elements of the American Federation of Labor are attempting to use the strike as a means of elevating themselves to power within the ranks of organized labor."

The report also charges that some of the highest officials of the labor organizations participating in the steel strike made false reports, not only to Samuel Gompers but also to President Wilson, during the period immediately preceding the going into effect of the strike order. The committee names as the men primarily responsible for the steel strike Samuel Gompers, John Fitzpatrick, Michael F. Tighe, and William Z. Foster. The report says:

"The committee is of the opinion that the American Federation of Labor has made a serious mistake and has lost much favorable public opinion which otherwise they would possess by permitting the leadership of this strike movement to pass into the hands of some who heretofore have entertained most radical and dangerous doctrines. If labor is to retain the confidence of that large element of our population which affiliates neither with labor organizations nor capital, it must keep men who entertain and formulate un-American doctrines out of its ranks and join with the employers of labor in eliminating this element from the industrial life of our nation.

Sees Gain for Corporation.

"Unquestionably the United States Steel Corporation has had the support of a larger and of a wider circle in the country during the strike because of the character of some of the strike leadership. Labor organizations should not place the workingman in the position of any sympathy with un-American doctrines or make them followers of any such leadership. Such practice will result in defeating the accomplishment of their demands.

"Take the case of William Z. Foster. Mr. Foster is Secretary to the Committee composed of the twenty-four international unions managing this strike. His duties were substantially to act as Secretary of the strike, to look after the organization of workers, and to handle the finances. He is in the office at Pittsburgh and seems to be the general manager of the strike. While it is claimed that he has had little to do with it, it is quite apparent to the committee that he has more to do with it than any other man in its actual management. He is one of the signers of the letter to the President and to Mr. Gary. He appears to be a man of excellent education, a thinker and a prolific writer.

"It is a source of regret to find that a man born in America should have written such doctrines as are set forth in his 'Syndicalism' and his more recent publications. At the time of his writing 'Syndicalism' he was wholly antagonistic to American labor unions, and especially to the American Federation of Labor. Soon after, however, he seems to have come to the conclusion that he could accomplish his aims and purposes better by 'boring from within,' as he expressed it in one letter to Solidarity, the I. W. W. publication. Carrying out his doctrine of 'boring from within' he became active in organized labor work and soon became a leader.

"We insert excerpts from his book showing that he believed that nothing was illegal if necessary to carry out his views. He advocated violence in strikes. He charged the American labor movement was infested with hordes of dishonest officials. He was closely associated with Mr. Margolis, present attorney for the I. W. W. at Pittsburgh, who has been behind this strike with all of his power; with Vincent St. John, formerly Secretary to the I. W. W., and the evidence convinces the committee there has been little change of heart on the part of Mr. Foster and that he is now in the full heyday of his power in the 'boring from within' process.

Says Foster Hurt the Strike.

"Such men are dangerous to the country and they are dangerous to the cause of union labor. It is unfair to men who may be struggling for their rights to be represented by such leaders. It prevents them from securing proper hearing for their cause. If Mr. Foster has the real interest of the laboring man at heart he should remove himself from any leadership. His leadership injures instead of helps. If he will not remove himself from leadership the American Federation of Labor should purge itself of such leadership in order to sustain the confidence which the country has had in it under the leadership of Mr. Gompers.

"We call attention also in this connection to the testimony of Mr. Margolis, who at least is entitled to credit for frankness in expounding his abominable doctrines before the committee. He is not a member of the Federation of Labor and has no connection with it, but he has rallied to the support of this strike in the Pittsburgh district the I. W. W. and anarchistic elements of the population. He has had strong influence with the Union of Russian Workers and secured their support for the strike. He admits that they are anarchists; he admits that he is an anarchist. He has been a close associate of Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, and attempted to organize at Pittsburgh all the various organizations antagonistic to Government. He assisted in spreading anarchistic literature and I. W. W. journals. He himself is against all Government. He is the kind of man who would not, as he himself testified, use any force against a man robbing his house or assailing his wife. He is apparently on close terms with Mr. Foster. While he criticised him for having given up his syndicalistic views, he leaves the impression that he believes Foster still has those views 'in the back of his head,' and that he had become a member of the American Federation of Labor for the purpose of better carrying out the policies that he really had in mind and to which he was sincerely attached.

"Mr. Margolies is a highly educated man, a good speaker, and the kind of man who is calculated to do immense harm. He cares not for the country which by law protects him. He has no sympathy for our American institutions.

"The evidence before the committee showed great activity at Gary among those who would be termed 'Reds,' and, while it would be unfair to say that they were the leading force behind the strike, it is fair to say that they were doing everything they could to help it.

Tells of Red Activities in Gary.

Lieutenant Van Buren of the regular army testified before the committee as to the great activities of anarchists and in Gary. Large quantities of anarchistic literature were found, some in homes, some in places of public meeting—Russian anarchistic literature, Socialist literature, Slovakian and other nationalities. It was somewhat interesting, though distressing, to hear from him that all the foreign societies were rather prosperous in Gary and that the only society that had gone out of business was the American society. This literature is being generally circulated. It is the literature of the Soviet. Its poison is being instilled into the minds of men who know nothing about this country, and apparently no effort is being made to have them know anything about it. We do not mean this as a reflection upon the American Federation of Labor. We would rather make it a plea to the federation to purge itself of these men.

"Labor has done a great work in the war. It has stood nobly by the purposes of this country. It cannot now afford to harbor men who in their hearts desire to destroy this Government.

"There may be, in view of the radical utterances and actions of certain leaders, some warrant for the belief that the strike in the steel industry is a part of a general scheme and purpose on the part of radical leaders to bring about a general industrial revolution. The committee, however, does not go to that extent, because it feels there were some real grievances. While Mr. Gompers did not originally participate in counseling or advising the strike, he subsequently indorsed it and put the power of his influence behind it. In view of his standing and patriotism, the committee does not believe that he could be a participant in a movement involving such revolution."

Referring to the efforts of President Wilson to bring about a postponement of the strike, the committee cites several of the letters that passed between the strike leaders and Mr. Gompers and the President. On Sept. 12 John Fitzpatrick wrote Gompers that "during the last few days" seven union organizers and members had been brutally murdered in cold blood. Concerning this statement and statements made in a letter to the President, the report adds:

"We may say, in passing, that the statement in the letter to Mr. Gompers that seven of the organizers and members had been brutally murdered in cold blood during the past few days is false. Many statements in the letter to the President likewise are very greatly exaggerated or false."

The committee points out that the steel workers themselves were not permitted, or even consulted regarding the President's request, to postpone the strike.

The investigation disclosed few complaints on the part of the workers as to wages, the lowest wage for unskilled labor that is paid in the industry being $4.62 a day.

"We find also," the report continues, "little complaint as to lack of safety appliances, as to improved machinery, or as to conditions in general outside of the long hours of work. In encouraging and assisting its employes to become owners of its stock, in guarding its employes against accidental injuries, in caring for the sick, and in sanitary precautions generally the work of the United States Steel Corporation at the present time is in the main admirable and in refreshing contrast to the short-sighted selfishness that still persists in many manufacturing concerns."

Gompers Is Censured.

The committee censured Mr. Gompers for his failure to postpone the strike when called upon to do so by the President, and also censures Judge Gary for not heeding the request of the President to confer with Gompers and other union labor officials in an effort to prevent the walkout.

Concerning hours of labor and collective bargaining, the committee finds that the laborers in the steel mills had a just complaint relative to the long hours of service on the part of some of them and the right to have that complaint heard by the company, and that they had the right to have the representatives of their own choosing present grievances to the employers. Some members of the committee believe that more friendly relations would be maintained between employer and employe if the representatives who are chosen to present grievances to the employers were actually working in the industry and that such representatives ought not to be from outside of the industry.

"The eight-hour day," says the report, "is involved in the solution of this question. These non-English-speaking aliens must be Americanized and must learn our language, so the question of a reasonable working day is involved in the question of Americanization. Men cannot work ten and twelve hours per day and attend classes at night school.

"It is the general consensus of opinion of the best economic writers and thinkers that the establishment of eight-hour day systems does not diminish production. Nor do we think the claim made that an eight-hour day is impossible because the workmen cannot be secured for three shifts is tenable. An eight-hour day with a living wage that will enable men to support their families and bring up their children according to the standards of American life ought to be a cardinal part of our industrial policy, and the sooner the principle is recognized the better it will be for the entire country.

"The public also has an interest in the problem of an eight-hour day. Fatigue in human kind is a breeder of unrest and dissatisfaction."

Remedies Are Suggested.

As a result of its inquiry into the steel strike the committee suggests the following remedies for the present industrial situation in the United States:

"First—That a board or commission somewhat similar to the War Trade Board should be established. This board to have power of compulsory investigation; to have large power in mediation and conciliation and recommendations; not to the extent of compulsory arbitration, but before this board controversies could be heard, investigations made, and decisions rendered. That pending said investigation and decision no strike should be declared, provided no employes are discharged for taking part in the controversy and provided further that an opportunity for the employer to take advantage of the delay has been removed; and the recommendations made to industry in relation thereto; that the board should be in the nature of a Federal industrial commission, seeking at all times not only to settle pending disputes but to help bring about a more harmonious condition between employer and employe. A just decision of said board would be indorsed by the public and public sentiment is powerful enough to enforce the findings of such a commission. There is good sense enough among the great body of the American people to bring about an adjustment of these difficulties. The great body of the American people believe in a liberal industrial system, in living wages for men employed in industry, wages that will permit them to raise their families according to the standards of American life and to enjoy recreation from hard, grinding toil; but the American people have no patience and will have none with any leadership that seeks to accomplish its purposes by barbarous methods of freezing or starving the American people. They do not propose to freeze and they do not propose to be starved, and they do not propose that a few men in this country shall have the power to bring about such condition of affairs. On the other hand, they are as much opposed to an autocracy of capital. Capital must be reasonable likewise. The employer must recognize that there is a new spirit in the world; that labor is not content to be merely a hewer of wood and a drawer of water, and that labor is fighting for a status in industrial life, and it is not concerned merely with wages.

"Why cannot capital and labor co-operate and establish between themselves the doctrine of the square deal; cease to be suspicious of one another, join together and act together for the good of each other and for the well-being of the public at large? It is the hope of the world that military warfare has ceased. Have we not reason also to hope and insist that industrial warfare may cease? It cannot without a spirit of mutual co-operation between capital and labor.

"Second—That an Americanization bill be passed by Congress which will provide for the effective education and Americanization of the illiterate foreigners and native illiterates in this country. A bill of this kind has already been reported out of this committee and your committee urges an early adoption of the same by Congress.

Urges Homes for the Workers.

"Third—It is observable in the strike districts that the men who own their homes are more contented and more interested in the affairs of the country. The real antidote for unrest in this country is home ownership. It is difficult to plant the seeds of revolution in the minds of those who own their own homes. The work of the steel companies in building homes has been commendable. It is to be hoped that such work will be enlarged and carried on by them. It would not be out of place to suggest that it would be most commendable for the steel companies to use some of their large profits in extending the work of home building. The question of aid and encouragement in the work of assisting townspeople of small means in securing their own homes in some such way as the farmer has been aided under the Federal Farm Loan act is worthy the serious consideration of Congress.

"Fourth—There should be a change in our naturalization laws which will require the naturalization and some education of all foreigners, at least to the extent of speaking the American language; that they acquire such knowledge within a period of five years after they arrive with proper limitations upon further immigration, giving to those already here a certain period of time in which to become naturalized, and if this is not done then deportation should follow.

"Fifth—An effective law should be passed dealing with anarchists, revolutionists, and all who would destroy the American Government. There are too many Americans who love their country and are willing to give their life for it and who intend that all the doors of American opportunity shall remain open for the children of today and the children of tomorrow to permit a few thousand anarchists, revolutionists, and I. W. W. to keep on with their nefarious propaganda to destroy the Government."

The report is signed by Senator Kenyon, Thomas Sterling, Lawrence C. Phipps, Kenneth McKellar, and David I. Walsh.

UNIVERSITY HEADS PLEAD FOR LOUVAIN

Committee for Restoration of Library Asks Americans for Early Contributions.

TO FINISH $500,000 FUND

Cardinal O'Connell and Louvain Alumni Also Join in Appeal for Support of Gift.

Cardinal O'Connell of Boston, President W. H. P. Faunce of Brown University, and President William Miller Collier of George Washington University last night joined President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University and his associates on the National Committee of the United States for the Restoration of the Library of the University of Louvain, in an appeal to the American people to respond promptly to the committee's request for contributions to the $500,000 fund which is being raised to build and equip a library as the free gift of America to Belgium.

Another appeal was sent out in the name of the widely scattered alumni of Louvain in the United States. This, which was signed by the Rev. Peter Guilday, associate professor of church history in the Catholic University of America, threw new light on German barbarism and described the deep personal loss sustained by Father Delannoy, one of Belgium's leading scholars. Father Guilday promised his aid in obtaining subscriptions to the fund.

The largest subscription yet received is $100,000 and the smallest $1, Dr. Butler stated last night. He made it plain that the fund is far from complete and in behalf of the Executive Committee renewed the appeal for subscriptions.

"The movement under way in America to secure funds to replace and equip the library of the University of Louvain," said Cardinal O'Connell, "is one which, I am sure, cannot but appeal to all Americans. In addition to the happiness the present generation will derive from the feeling that they are, by their generosity, enkindling new courage in the hearts of the unfortunate across the sea, America will be creating a monument in the Old World which for centuries to come will stand as a testimonial of her ideals and as a memorial to her endeavors in the interest of education."

Another message from Boston in the interest of the movement came from Alfred L. Aiken, President of the Shawmut National Bank. Mr. Aiken pledged his personal efforts to the committee. Lars Anderson of Brookline, Mass., former Minister to Belgium, was another who promised his aid.

President Faunce, from Providence, assured Dr. Butler and his associates on the Executive Committee that "I am most heartily and enthusiastically in favor of the movement." Dr. Faunce is a member of the National Louvain Committee.

Dr. Collier's message said: "Individuals connected with our university have made their personal contributions, but it is my desire that our university as an institution be permitted to associate itself with others in this noble work which is so graceful a manner of expressing the sympathy that exists between Belgian and American scholars."

The appeal issued in behalf of the Louvain alumni through Dr. Guilday, who is the managing editor of The Catholic Historical Review, said:

"As one of the last students to enjoy the use of the library at Louvain, where I finished my graduate studies in June 1914, I feel that I am honored in being permitted to give voice to the sentiment of all who have been students at the Belgian university within recent years by assuring America that of all the projects included under the general term of restoration nothing lies closer to our hearts than to see the Anciens Halles restored to their former splendid state.

Father Delannoy's Work.

"Dr. Koch has told the story of the library at Louvain in his excellent brochure, 'The University of Louvain and Its Library,' and his wish that 'the University of Louvain will rise again, phoenix-like, from its ashes,' is the wish of all who have seen the library, and especially of those who have labored as students in its picturesque galleries. The most pathetic thing to those who saw the library as late as June, 1914, is that the charming and erudite Father Delannoy, who was then the librarian, had at that time finished the work of restoring the Old Halles to their fifteenth century style at his own expense.

"In a series of lectures which he gave at the College de France in February, 1915, Father Delannoy tells us that the ruins of the library will remain as an eternal stigma upon the militaristic power which destroyed it. Around the Old Halles are many precious historical remembrances, dating back beyond the time when Columbus set out to discover this new land.

"In the Salle des Pas Perdus, which formed the vestibule to the Halles, students in the time of the great Spaniard walked arm-in-arm discussing this new world and the vast possibilities which even then, though obscurely, they could foresee in the future; and as Father Delannoy has written: 'The resurrection of these Old Halles will be the monument which will recall to all generations to come the triumph of right over brute force, or civilization over babarity.'

"Over the main portal of the library are the words: 'Wisdom has built here for herself a home.' It is in the name of science, as well as in that of justice, that the appeal your committee is making should be heard by all who have the progress of civilization and of right culture at heart."

Minister Without Salary Helps.

Dr. Guilday, as an ancien eleve de Louvain, closed by wishing the committee every success in what he styled an heroic undertaking.

One of the most interesting contributions received by the committee was from up-State, New York. It was accompanied by this letter: "I, a retired minister, having had no salary since 1903, and one whose income from lectures has been destroyed by the war and the 'movies,' send a small contribution in money, $1, and will send direct to Louvain some books sure to be appreciated in Belgium. May God bless the mite—and Mercier—too great to need a title."

Special appeals are being sent to many large cities for subscriptions. Among the banks to which donations may be forwarded, in addition to Morgan & Co., are Continental and Commercial National Bank, Chicago; Merchants' Laclede National Bank, St. Louis; Union Savings Bank and Trust Company, Cincinnati; Crocker National Bank, San Francisco; Merchants' and Farmers' National Bank, Los Angeles; Merchants' National Bank, St. Paul.

The Executive Committee, in a statement last night, emphasized the fact that an impartial examination of the circumstances surrounding the destruction of the Louvain Library establishes that it was an act of vandalism unsanctioned by the laws of humanity or of war.

EMBARGO SILVER BULLION.

England Prohibits Export—Action Laid to Domestic Scarcity.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The export of silver bullion specie has been prohibited.

New York City dealers in silver yesterday attributed the British embargo tot several causes. Silver bullion, it was stated, is very scarce in England, domestic consumption having increased greatly in the last few months. Another reason advanced by metal dealers here was that the present high price of silver in England might tempt holders to melt coin into bullion for export. Such an operation, it was said, would be profitable with the high price of the metal now prevailing in London.

SEES LEGION AS GREAT CIVIC FORCE

Major Compton, Delegate to National Convention, Tells Hopes of Veterans.

AGAINST CASH BONUSES

Believes There Are Better Plans for Adjusting Handicaps Suffered by Nation's Defenders.

The strength and importance of an organization for which 5,000,000 American citizens are eligible for membership and which already includes one-fifth of this number, was pointed out by Major George Brokaw Compton, one of the delegates from the State of New York to the national convention of the American Legion, as he was leaving for Minneapolis, where the Legion's convention will be held this week. Major Compton was active in the organization of the Legion in New York, acting as temporary chairman during the membership drive, presiding at the convention of 1,100 delegates at Carnegie Hall, and the reception to King Albert in Madison Square Garden.

"The American Legion has firmly taken root in every county in every State," said Major Compton, "and soon every community will have at least one local post.

"I believe the Legion now has the confidence of the American people and that the fear that existed in some minds that this great organization of ex-service men would allow itself to be used to further individual and party politics—ambitions and measures—has disappeared."

"The legion invites attention," said Major Compton, "to the specific action of the New York County Convention, at which 1,100 delegates unanimously laid down the policy that in this county no candidate for election to public office shall at the same time hold office or standing committee membership in the Legion and that no post, committee, or other body of the Legion shall indorse any candidate for office, any political party, or any partisan movement.

"The action in New York County has been heralded throughout the country and has blazed the trail in a very salutary manner. It translated into concrete and convincing action the sincere professions that for several months had failed to convince. We are going to insist at Minneapolis that a concrete and definite provision against all forms of partisan activity be put into the permanent national constitution.

Against Cash Bonuses.

"After laying on the table at its convention a motion calling for a flat cash bonus for all ex-service men, the New York County delegation at the State convention voted unanimously against a flat bonus and supported the recommendations contained in the report of the preliminary committee on resolutions which was presented by Colonel Francis L. Robbins, Jr., who had been Chairman of the New York County Committee on the reception to King Albert in Madison Square Garden.

"This report said, 'The American Legion should studiously avoid all action that might stamp it as a self-seeking organization. Entirely aside from questions of merit, any action by the Legion as a body recommending its members as individuals for unique preference or privilege or for a flat cash bonus would not merely give rise to accusations of impropriety but would actually injure its influence for good in the country.'

"This committee recognizes that, in many instances, men who have been in the service have been at a serious disadvantage and have suffered heavy material loss, as contrasted with those who through physical disability or some other reason did not enter the army or navy. To the fullest possible extent, injustice of this character should be remedied. This would not be remedied, however, by a flat cash bonus, whether of $100 or of $800; and in many cases payments would be made to men who were not in need of such help. We believe that Government long-term loans at low rates of interest and on easy conditions as to security, either for the purpose of land development, of home building, or of assisting a man to make a fresh start in business represent a far sounder method of compensating those who have suffered material losses and of enabling them to get on their feet and to compete on an equal basis with those who remained in civil life.

"Although this recommendation was unheeded, and a flat bonus resolution adopted by a vote of 130 to 98, an opposite result would have been obtained had not ten or twelve delegations been instructed to vote for a bonus. Many delegates stated on the floor of the convention that although they felt themselves bound by their instructions, they had become convinced of the unwisdom of action asking for a flat bonus.

"I doubt," continued Major Compton, "if there is so much genuine sentiment in Congress in favor of cash bonuses. Many bonus bills have been introduced by speculators for political popularity; but, whatever may be the merits in the case, I believe the time has long since passed when the American people would pay a big bonus uncomplainingly.

Should Aid Fighters.

"I think something should have been done to adjust the handicap suffered by the service man who severed for months all business and social connections, but I believe it is neither to his own best personal interest nor good public policy for him now to demand a bonus. The sort of intelligent self-interest that places the welfare of the general public above that of the individual is in the end the best policy for the individual. The material benefits that will be foregone now by refraining from asking for a bonus, and having public resentment thrown in for full measure, will be offset many times in the years to come by a public grateful not only for service on the field of battle, but grateful also for unselfish self-restraint in the face of social discontent. The wounded and the disabled will be cared for generously. The able-bodied in need ought to be helped in every way that does not bear the taint of charity. Both can be more adequately helped if flat cash bonuses are not awarded to thousands who don't need them."

"The Legion is still in a formative stage," according to Major Compton. "The coming year will be a vital period in its history. With a post or posts in every community in the United States the Legion may become a most powerful and constructive force for good or evil in our public life, decreasing or increasing the unrest that is such a serious factor in the world today. If the suspicion and ill-will of the people are incurred, whether justly or unjustly, the harm to the Legion's members and to the nation at large will be incalculable. But if, as is hoped, the Legion deserves and can hold the confidence and good-will of the public it will have an ever-increasing field of usefulness."

In several communities in New York City club houses will be equipped as real social centres. Among these are Harlem, Greenwich Village, Upper Washington Heights, and Yorkville. It is hoped that eventually there will be twenty or more club houses owned and operated by posts of the Legion and so distributed throughout Manhattan Island that, by accommodating 5,000 members each, club privileges will be available to every ex-service man. Such clubs on the scale proposed would have an undeniably wholesome influence in the social life of the city.

PLEA TO COLLEGE PEOPLE.

Students and Graduates Wanted for Neighborhood Work.

A special plea for college students and graduates has been issued by Miss Mary Elizabeth Barr, recruiting officer for the volunteer drive of the United Neighborhood Houses of New York. The neighborhood houses are in great need of club leaders and especially desire that college men and women volunteer for this work.

Every neighborhood house has various clubs connected with it through which much of its important work is done. The members range from children just out of kindergarten to mothers and fathers, the activities of the club depending upon the wishes of the members and their leaders. Some of the clubs are musical, some dramatic, some literary. There are sewing clubs, cooking clubs, Americanization clubs, debating clubs, athletic clubs, civic clubs, all with the idea of fostering a spirit of co-operation and neighborliness among the people.

Nearly all of the forty-five houses belonging to the United Neighborhood Houses need leaders for these clubs. Men and women who have had college training, or special training along lines used by social workers, prove most successful as leaders and it is hoped that as many as possible will volunteer. The clubs for the smaller children meet in the morning but clubs for boys and girls and grown-ups meet in the late afternoon or evening. All college students who can give one or two afternoons or evenings a week are urged to register at the recruiting office at 27 Barrow Street.

PLAN AGRICULTURAL FUTURE OF SERBIA

Eleven Members of the Relief Committee Sail to Take Up Work Among the Boys.

ORPHANS' MORALE UPHELD

Conditions Under Which They Lived Did Not Impair Their Characters —Relief Contributions.

Eleven members of the overseas personnel of the Serbian Relief Committee of America, 70 Fifth Avenue, sailed yesterday on the President Wilson for Patras, Greece, from where the party will proceed to Saloniki, later joining Commissioner William J. Doherty at the Serbian headquarters of the organization at Chachak. This place is in the centre of old Serbia, sixty-five miles south of Belgrade, and here has been located the hub from which all the Serbian Relief Committee's activities will radiate.

Included in the party are: Miss Meta L. Anderson of New Jersey, an authority upon the care and training of children; Mrs. Elmer Chase Gray, New York, chief investigator; Miss Nellie B. Chadwick of Indiana, dietitian; Mrs. Phoebe Gregg, Philadelphia, chief placing agent; Mrs. Mabel Gregg Gwynne, Philadelphia, assistant placing agent; Miss Sara White, Philadelphia, pharmacist; R. D. Cover, Brooklyn, Secretary to the Commissioner; Howard A. Julie, Brooklyn, head farmer; Abraham Sachen, Cohoes, N. Y., Secretary to the Deputy Commissioner; Mrs. William B. Buck and her mother, Mrs. S. V. Bacorn, on their way to join Deputy Commissioner Buck.

The program for this reconstruction work, which has been called one of the most extensive so far projected for any country of Europe, was outlined by Commissioner Doherty in conference with Professor M. I. Pupin of Columbia University; Homer Folks, Secretary of the State Charities Aid Association; John A. Kingsbury, former Commissioner of Charities of New York City; representatives of the American Relief Administration, and other American agencies.

Among other things it is planned to make the training of boys in modern agricultural methods an important branch of the work, not only for their own sake but for the good of Serbia, inasmuch as that country is essentially an agricultural land, and with her man-power reduced by the war, must be provided with the means of producing her own subsistence.

The Central Committee at Belgrade, under the Presidency of Bishop Nicholas of Chachak, represents the Government, the Serbian Church, Serbian Relief Committee, (London,) British Red Cross, and American Red Cross, as well as the Serbian Relief Committee of America.

The Serbian Relief Committee has just received a report from Miss Ethel Chadwick, now in Serbia, which goes far to relieve anxiety in regard to any possible deterioration of character among the Serbian war orphans, due to the conditions under which they were forced to live during the period of occupation by enemy forces.

The following contributions of $200 or more were acknowledged last week by the following war relief organizations:

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Prices of Industrial Stocks Fall Back Under Heavy Sales—Surplus Reserve Up.

Heavy selling marked business in stocks yesterday, aimed particularly at the industrial issues which were leaders of the recent advancing movement. At the end of the session a number of the steel, automobile, sugar, and rubber shares were from 3 to more than 5 points under Friday's final quotations. While the comment of brokerage offices indicated that considerable profit taking was contained in the output of stocks, the more important influences at work were liquidation of long accounts, irrespective of profits or losses, and the operations of short sellers. The unsettlement noted on Friday, inspired by the situation of the credit market, was continued, and it seemed as though bearish sentiment was increased by indications that court proceedings in the miners' strike would be pressed. Trading was nervous in the last quarter hour and prices gave only slight signs of recovery.

In the cotton market the tendency was upward under a moderate volume of business. Spot cotton sold at New York for the first time at 40 cents a pound. In Southern spot markets the quotation for staple for immediate delivery reached 43 cents several days ago.

Outside of the uncertain aspect of the coal strike, the week ended with the business outlook somewhat better than a fortnight ago. Reports from manufacturing and distributing centres indicated in the final days that signs of improving labor conditions were finding some reflection in sales of goods and in plans for future production. As regards the soft coal situation, sentiment veered to the viewpoint that some sort of agreement would be reached shortly among the Government, the miners, and employers which would end the strike. The soundness of this opinion, of course, remains to be proved by events this week. The stock market paid much less attention to underlying matters of industry because of the overshadowing influence of bank credit on speculative operations. The record of transactions and prices showed that the speculative load on the long side was lightened somewhat after the Federal Reserve Bank raised its discount rates, and the next few days will doubtless reveal more fully the plans of traders. The Clearing House bank statement disclosed a contraction of loans during the week, which was brought about in part by the liquidation of stocks.

The combined bank loan account was reduced $38,600,000, according to the statement of actual condition on Friday. The surplus reserve was expanded almost $50,000,000, a result which showed a determination of the banks to move into a stronger position. Borrowings at the Federal Reserve Bank accounted for most of the increased excess reserve, as the reserve with the central institution was built up $43,300,000 higher than the week before and rediscounts at the Reserve Bank based on Government obligations increased no less than $93,000,000. The total of this class of discounts reported by the Reserve Bank was $795,211,872, a new high record and about $2,000,000 more than was announced in the previous record week, that of May 16. Rediscounts of commercial paper declined $21,000,000 and the bank showed a recession of $31,000,000 in the amount of bills bought in the open market.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

The Bank Statement.

Yesterday's Clearing House statement of actual condition, superficially at least, was "favorable," for it showed an expansion of $49,758,510 in excess reserve to $96,301,259, the largest it has been since October, last year, and a contraction in loans of $38,668,000. Also, there was an increase of $43,883,000 in the member banks' reserve deposits with the Reserve Bank. However, the member banks increased their borrowings on Government paper by $93,069,933, against a decrease on other borrowings at the Reserve Bank of only $21,740,905, for a net increase of $71,329,028, or $27,946,028 more than their reserve deposits increased. This state of affairs hardly is so favorable.

At the Reserve Bank.

The Reserve Bank's weekly statement also showed some new high records. In the first place, the weekly expansion in Government paper borrowings constitutes a new record for any week of this year. The aggregate of the borrowings also is a new high record, $795,211,872, against the previous high marks of $742,901,703, July 11, and $792,953,328, May 16. The total of all bills held by the Reserve Bank, which was put at $958,673,952, is still another high figure, comparing with $924,606,102, July 11, and $888,262,272, May 16. Then there is the total of member banks' reserve deposits, standing at $806,971,597, a high record for the local bank for all time.

A Saturday Reaction.

While the majority of stocks in the general list sold off yesterday and showed little if any evidence of a recovery in the last hour of trading, the volume of selling was not large, compared with the turnover in more active sessions, and in some quarters the decline was referred to as "A Saturday reaction." The wire houses were said to be advising small customers to get out of the market, and there was little in many of the week-end market letters which could be interpreted as anything except pessimistic. The professional element felt the uneasy sentiment early and sold some of those issues which recently have moved into higher ground. A general easing of commitments was apparent.

Some Rails Advance.

A feature of the market was that chief among issues which closed with a net gain were railroad shares. Traders have indicated belief that the rails have offered a good medium for speculation recently, and it seemed yesterday as if there had been some real investment buying during the week. In more popular railroad shares the general decline of other issues brought about a sympathetic movement. Southern Pacific sold off more than 2 points, but recovered more than a point before the close. Lake Erie & Western also regained half of an early decline. Among the rails which moved contrary to the market were Denver & Rio Grande, Great Northern preferred, New York Central, and Norfolk & Western.

Sentiment Improved on Coal Strike.

Sentiment in the financial district seemed improved over developments in the coal strike. In some quarters attention was drawn to reports that non-union coal miners had refused to deal with union organizers, and had treated summarily delegates sent into their districts. Satisfaction also was expressed over reports that non-union men are doing their best to increase production. The firm stand of the Government also was regarded as evidence that the coal strike would burn out much after the fashion of the steel strike.

New Financing Contemplated.

It was learned in the financial district that the Board of the American La France Fire Engine Company is considering a plan to divide its stock into smaller units. The stock is closely held. It is understood that the company is considering offering to present holders of the $100 par value stock ten shares of new stock with a par value fo $10.

White Motors Capital Increase.

It was not considered as strange that White Motors eased off along with the bulk of the general list, in view of the announcement that the company's directors have authorized an increase in capitalization from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000. The new stock is to be offered to present shareholders.

Victory Notes at New Low.

Victory 3¾s and 4¾s sold down to a new low record, at 99.38, on the big board. The entire list was under pressure, and while the heavy trading was in Liberty fourth 4¼s, those bonds held well, closing above the low for the day, at 93.

TAKEN FROM SCIENCE BY WAR

LONDON, Oct. 24, (Associated Press.)—Sir Oliver Lodge, the scientist, during a lecture here on "The Structure of the Atom," told how the services of a young scientific genius were lost to the world through his death in the war.

He was Lieutenant Henry G. J. Moseley of the Royal Engineers, who was shot by a sniper at Gallipoli. Just prior to joining the army Lieutenant Moseley had succeeded in counting the electrons of the atom, a feat which, it is said, will carry his name through scientific history for all time. He was 27 years old and a son of the late Professor H. N. Moseley, a distinguished zoologist.

COTTON MARKET HAS FURTHER RISE

Irregular Start Turns with Trade Buying Into Strong Gains for the Day.

SPOT PRICE HITS 40 CENTS

Ginning Figures Show Rapid Harvesting and Turning Out of the Crop.

Yesterday's short session in the local cotton market was decidedly two-sided. At the start the market was irregular and after the call prices eased off 25 to 30 points for the active months. The ginning figures were rather bearish, showing an unexpectedly large amount ginned for the period and indicating that the crop is being harvested more rapidly than was generally expected.

In the early trading there was some light buying by Wall Street houses and the trade took a little, but profit-taking by ring bulls and week-end evening up filled this demand and caused the initial decline. At this time trading was limited and business fell off to small proportions.

Then, shortly before the start of the last hour, the market began to improve. Trade buying appeared, and with the end of the readjustment operations prices started upward. On this rally March was lifted 72 points from the early low, while December and January gained about 50 points each. This rise took December to the basis of 38 cents, January to over 37 cents, and March to about 36½ cents. September of next year's crop, which had started down 25 points, at 32.40, closed firm at 32.85, a gain of 20 points on the day.

The local spot market was firm and showed an advance of 25 points in quotation to the basis of 40 cents, the first time the price has gone to that figure. In the trade it was predicted that now that spot has reached 40 cents the advance will be even more rapid than it has been for the last three or four weeks.

FEWER RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

Eastern Region Shows Decrease of 51% in "No Accident Drive."

The United States Railroad Administration in the Eastern region made public yesterday a survey of the accident prevention drive on all lines from Oct. 19 to 31. The officials estimate that as a result of the drive many human lives were saved and hundreds of injuries avoided. The report follows:

In the Eastern region, of which A. T. Hardin is Director and Rufus Jarnagin Safety Supervisor, during the first eight days of the "no accident drive," the total casualties were 278, as compared with 600 casualties in the corresponding period of eight days last year. In the Eastern region transportation conditions present extraordinarily difficult problems and unusual hazards of life and limb. The safety record is made the more impressive by the fact that, with railroad business greatly exceeding that in October, 1918, more than 10,000 employes have been added to the rolls of the 101 railroads in the Eastern region in the past twelve months.

The New York Central Railroad, of which P. E. Crowley is Federal Manager, showed the greatest actual reduction in the number of casualties with 88 in the eight days this year as compared with 140 for the same period last year. Sixty-two of the 101 railroads in the Eastern region showed a clear record for the eight days with no casualties whatever. Of the larger railroads, the Wabash came nearest to the perfect record, with only one casualty, as against twenty-two casualties in the same period last year.

For the nation at large, in the first week of the accident prevention drive, 1,360 lives were saved and 22,106 persons preserved from injury, a reduction of 20 per cent. from the casualties in the corresponding week last year.

In the Eastern region a preliminary report by Supervisor of Safety Jarnagin, covering the first eleven days of the drive, shows only 398 accidents, against 807 for the same period last year, a decrease of 51 per cent. Ten railroads show perfect records, with a 100 per cent. decrease in accidents.

Accompanying the report is a table showing the detailed record of each railroad in the Eastern region.

Fractional Interest in Oil Leases

The custom in the Oil Industry followed by all the large and successful corporations, which the average investor does not seem to understand, is the practice of purchasing and owning fractional interests in oil leaseholds. They wonder why the larger companies with ample resources do not purchase all of the lease, instead of a part. Geologic faults apt to occur in oil formation make for uncertainty even in proven territory. These faults or omissions which appear in proven fields are naturally expected in outlaying districts. Therefore, the operating companies for acreage reserve must widely diversify their risks to allow the law of average in their entire holdings to strike for the proper balance. Another reason for fractional interests is to secure and insure the co-operation of other prominent companies to cause development on a larger scale.

DEMAND FOR COTTON AT 40 CENTS GROWS

Local Market Records Highest Prices for Spot Staple Since Civil War.

TRADE SEES HIGHER MARK

Domestic and Foreign Users Bidding Fast and Paying High Premiums.

Spot cotton was quoted at 40 cents a pound in the New York market yesterday for the first time since the civil war. In some of the Southern markets it was even higher than this figure. At Galveston, for instance, it sold at 43 cents a pound, having gone through the 40-cent mark several days ago. And, notwithstanding these record prices, the demand for the staple, especially for the better grades, is said to be larger now than it was a month or so ago, when the price was anywhere from $25 to $40 a bale cheaper. Also, many trade authorities believe the top has not as yet been reached, and predictions are being made that cotton will sell at 50 cents a pound, and even higher, before the end of the year.

The cotton situation at the present time is working into a condition the like of which has not been seen in many years. In the first place, the demand for cotton is increasing rapidly. Both domestic users and foreign consumers are bidding for it and are paying high premiums for the good grades of white cotton. Domestic mills are buying more than they were expected to take a short time ago, and the foreign consumers apparently have found a way to buy cotton in large quantities, despite the highly unfavorable foreign exchange market. Even Germany is now a conspicuous buyer of American cotton, and, unlike German purchases of other years, the Germans now are bidding for the best grades. In pre-war times the German demand was largely for the cheap grades.

In the second place, there is a small crop this year, smaller than it has been in many years, in fact, and on top of the poor gross yield, the late and unfavorable season has resulted in an acute shortage of choice grades. Some trade experts say that the proportion of good cotton to all the cotton grown will be smaller this season than at any time within the last ten or fifteen years.

Seeks Early Supply.

In the last two or three months the cotton situation has undergone a decided change. Back in the third week in July, when the staple touched the highest prices it had reached up to that time in 1919, it was believed that the shortage, if any, would not eventuate until some time late next Spring or during next Summer. For this reason there was a tendency on the part of cotton consumers to favor the distant future options, and at that time future contracts for delivery next March and May sold on about a parity with the contracts for delivery in December and January.

On July 23, when the first "high records" were made for the year, the July contract in the futures market was quoted almost at the same price that spot cotton was bringing. Now, however, spot cotton is nearly 2 cents a pound higher even than the current future contract. Yesterday spot cotton was quoted at 40 cents, and November cotton in futures was quoted at 38.05. And, whereas in July the distant months were on a parity with the near months, now there is a premium of approximately 2½ cents on the near months over the distant options.

All of this would indicate that the cotton trade looks for a shortage, especially in the good grades, to develop very soon. As a matter of fact, this is precisely what is being predicted, and that higher prices are not obtaining for the distant options is due partly to a belief that prices will go so high around the first of the year that the consuming public will be driven to find ways for economizing. There is also some feeling that the foreign demand will fall off somewhat because of high prices and the hardships attendant upon securing credits.

An outstanding feature of the market in recent weeks has been the big foreign demand and the large shipments, which have been going ahead steadily despite the foreign exchange market and the difficulties of getting shipments moving as a result of the labor troubles which have manifested themselves at several important ports. Both New York and New Orleans have had more than the usual amount of trouble with labor and shipments out of these two ports have been correspondingly reduced. But other ports, notably Galveston and Savannah, have done a tremendous export business in cotton.

Exports Show Increase.

Total exports of cotton since the beginning of the present cotton season, which starts on Aug. 1, have amounted to 1,154,441 bales, against 996,684 bales in the same period of last year. Of this total 568,122 bales have gone to Great Britain, 85,260 bales have been sent to France, 444,356 bales have been consigned to other parts of Europe, and 56,699 bales have been exported to China and Japan. Last year, in the same time, Great Britain took 525,223 bales, France took 144,949 bales, the rest of the Continent 205,485 bales, and the Orient took 30,948 bales. A year ago exports for the period to Mexico amounted to 180 bales, while this year the records show only 4 bales exported from New Orleans to Mexico.

Of the 444,356 bales exported to European countries other than England and France, about 125,000 have gone direct to German ports, and of the remainder it is generally believed that a fair portion has been sent to European neutrals with the idea of its ultimately reaching Germany. The Germans, who were greatly handicapped by the extremely low quotation of German marks in the exchange market, have instituted a system of barter and of transferring credits which has allowed them to buy considerably more American cotton this season than either France or Italy have been able to secure.

If all the American cotton which has gone to Germany this year were recorded some experts in the trade believe that the total would even exceed the combined total of French and Italian takings to date. However, these latter countries are expected to buy more heavily as soon as some credit scheme can be worked out for their benefit. But, on the other hand, if that scheme is not forthcoming very soon, there is some fear that the American market will be denuded of the good grades before their buying appears.

DU BOIS LIBRARY SOON TO BE SOLD

Collection Includes Many First Editions and Illuminated Manuscripts.

SPECIMENS OF BINDING ART

Originals of Dickens and Thackeray Among Volumes of Boston Collector.

The library of the late Loren Griswold Du Bois of Boston, consisting of first editions, illuminated manuscripts, mezzotint portraits, and war medals of British naval and military officers, will be sold at the American Art Galleries Nov. 17 and 18.

Many of the volumes are bound by such masters as Chambolle-Durn, Derome, De Sauty, Zachnsdorf, Tout, and Riviere, while there are examples of bindings executed for Mme. Adelaide of France, Queen Amelie, George III., and Louise de Bourbon.

There are first editions of the works of Charles Dickens and an important collection of Thackerayana. Among the Dickens items is a first edition of "The Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club" in the original wrappers and parts. It compares favorably with the Lapham, Coggeshall, Captain Douglas, and Austin copies. Other scarce books are William Heath's "Pickwickian Illustrations," first edition; "The Beauties of Pickwick, Collected and Arranged by Sam Weller," and T. Gibson's "Sketches of Expeditions from the Pickwick Club."

A collection of first editions of the writings of Thackeray is in sixty-four volumes. In one book is inserted an autograph letter written in the early fifties by Thackeray to Miss Mary Holmes, a music teacher and protege. In part it reads:

"I write all day at my book. I go into the world then, which is a part of my vacation, and takes up a woful quantity of my time. Many a day I find my only recourse is to stay in my bedroom, and go on working there with an amanuensis. You told me that I had spoken too freely, and so I did, and can't now if I would."

He continues in a confidential style, telling of his life, his plans, and his children, and assures her that he will be glad to do her any possible service "not as a patron, Bon Dieu, I hate the idea of patronage."

Original Issue of Vanity Fair.

Among the other items are his "Second Funeral of Napoleon," the original issue; "Vanity Fair," first edition in the original parts, yellow wrappers; first editions of "Pendennis," "The Newcomes," and "The Virginians" in the original parts; eleven pages of galley proofs, from the Cornhill Magazine, of the opening chapter of "Lovel, the Widower," with erasions, insertions, and other alterations in Thackeray's handwriting, and a letter by him with an original pen-and-ink sketch.

The library contains noted examples of fifteenth century illuminated manuscripts, such as "Horace Beatae Mariae Virginis," on 140 leaves of vellum, with six large and twenty-five smaller miniatures, in a binding by Chambolle-Durn; the "Book of Hours," in Gothic characters, on 110 leaves of vellum, with colored miniatures and borders; a copy of the "Missale Romanum," in Gothic characters, on 176 leaves of vellum, with thirteen large and twenty-one smaller miniatures, and the "Officium Beatae Mariae Virginis Usum Romanum," in Gothic characters, with letters in gold and colors.

"Contes et Nouvelles en Vers," by Jean de la Fontaine, 1762, is a fine copy of this work, known as the edition of the Fermiers-Generaux, one of the greatest products of the French engravers of the eighteenth century, and Eisen's acknowledged masterpiece. Other French illustrated books are "Le Temple de Guide," by Montesquien, Paris, 1772, a large paper copy in binding by Lortic Fils, and "Plaisirs de l'Amour," 1782, in binding by Chambolle-Durn.

There are many fine examples of extra-illustrated books in the collection. This section of the library was a labor of love with Mr. Du Bois with the result that many choice prints have entered into the various works as additional plates. Among the books are "Fanny Burney and Her Friends," edited by L. B. Seeley, large paper copy, with 125 extra plates, in two volumes; "London in the Jacobite Times," by Dr. John Doran, with 600 additional plates, in six volumes; "Their Majesties' Servants," by the same author, with 1,000 additional plates, first edition, extended to eight volumes; "The Story of Nell Gwyn," by Peter Cunningham, large paper, with 500 additional plates, extended to three volumes, and "Letters and Journals of Lord Byron," first edition, with 350 additional plates, in four volumes.

Many Handsome Color Plates.

Students of the reign of the House of Stuarts will find many items of interest relating to the Scottish and Jacobean rebellions of 1625 to 1748, and to the royal house of Stuarts. There are also many tracts and books relating to this period and to the reigns of George II. and George III.

Among items of color plate interest are "Martial Achievements of Great Britain," London, 1815; Thornton's "Post Captain," first edition, 1849; "The English Spy," by Westmacott, first edition, with etchings by Robert Cruikshank, and first editions of Egan's "Real Life in London" and "Finish to Adventures of Tom, Jerry and Logic."

Included in American historical works are Knox's "Journal of the Campaign in North America," London, 1769; "An Accurate and Authentic Journal of the Siege of Quebec," and Entinck's "General History of the Late War," first edition, 1763. The Rev. C. L. Dodgson is represented by first editions of "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," "Phantasmagoria and Other Poems," "Through the Looking Glass," and "Rhyme and Reason." There are almost complete publications of the Grolier Club of New York and the Bibliophile Society of Boston. The mezzotint engravings comprise portraits of a number of British officers and statesmen. Among them is a colored portrait of Lord Nelson.

The Merchant's Point of View

A TOUCH of cooler weather during the last week proved a spur to some seasonable buying at retail, and this, in turn, made its influence felt in productive circles. But there are evidences that the indiscriminate buying which was so marked for many months is losing some of its force, except by certain classes of speculators in the primary markets who are trying to force a demand at high prices, on the theory of a scarcity of merchandise which they themselves are seeking to create artificially. Retailers are beginning to show an aversion to stocking up liberally at the prevailing high cost of merchandise, because this means tying up much more capital than has been customary, and, consequently, heavier borrowing to finance the deals. The inflation or expansion of credits is impressing itself more and more on business men, as it did long ago on the banking interests, and there is an urge toward contraction, in order to relieve the strain and guard against what may happen when the inevitable shrinkage in the prices of commodities takes place. Credit men are alive to the situation, as appears from the caution they are showing in the handling of accounts. Indebtedness and promptness of collections are being watched with greater care than ever before, despite the fact that failures are unusual on a rising market such as has been the case for over six months. Possibilities, no less than probabilities, are being taken into account.

Recent Growth of Imports.

A tendency has been shown toward unduly emphasizing the recent increase in the imports to this country as of more consequence than the circumstances warrant. It grows out of the fact that in September, the latest month for which detailed statistics are available, the imports footed up a total of $425,384,667, which was an increase of $173,716,023 over those in the corresponding month last year. This has been heralded as the turn in the tide of the country's foreign commerce. An analysis of the figures hardly bears out this notion. For the entire nine months of the present calendar year the imports foot up $2,696,973,261, which is $374,420,011 more than in the similar period of 1918. Of the increase, as therefore appears, nearly one-half was in September, but such increase was comparatively small in the classification of manufactures ready for consumption. Only about $16,000,000, or less than 10 per cent. of the imports, was in that category. There was an increase of nearly $100,000,000 in imports of crude materials for use in manufacturing; one of about $34,500,000 in foodstuffs in crude condition and food animals, and another of $28,000,000 in foodstuffs wholly or partly manufactured. The imports of manufactures for further use in manufacturing amounted to about $5,000,000 less than in the preceding September. Taking these data together, the inference to be drawn is that the bulk of the increase in imports was intended simply to aid in increasing the country's manufacturing and industrial output and was not a supplanting of the domestic products by those of foreign make.

Meaning of Foreign Trade Figures.

Then, the other side of the ledger must be considered. The exports in September showed an increase over those of the corresponding month of 1918 by over $40,000,000. For the nine months ended with September they were $3,036,926,915 in excess of the imports, while such excess of exports in the three-quarter period of 1918 was only $2,164,724,803. If the same ratio is kept up for the remainder of the calendar year the exports will top the imports by over $4,000,000,000 as against a little over $3,000,000,000 in the year 1918. An especially gratifying feature in the exports was the increase in the nine months' period of over $300,000,000 in manufactures ready for consumption, while the imports of such articles remained practically stationary. Other features of the exports were an increase of about $400,000,000 in crude materials for use in manufacturing, mostly raw cotton, and about $650,000,000 increase in foodstuffs of one kind or another. There was a drop in the exports of about $123,000,000 in manufactures for further use in manufacturing. For the nine months' period the only decreases in exports were to France, Italy, Canada, and Chile, the biggest being to Canada and amounting to about $125,000,000. In the list of imports to the United States a half dozen countries show a decline, the principal ones being Argentina, Chile, and the British East Indies. Taking all things together, including the unsettled condition of exchange on various countries, there is as yet nothing to indicate any trend toward a new alignment of the balance of trade.

Inquiry as to Knit Goods.

An interesting question is now before the Federal Trade Commission for decision. A certain concern making underwear has been complained of for misrepresentation and has been cited to appear before the commission to answer the complaint. In its answer it admits that it has made and sold "and labeled, advertised, and branded certain lines of underwear as 'Australian Wool,' 'Valley Cashmere Camel Hair,' 'Lamb's Wool,' 'Scotch Wool,' 'Persian Fleece,' and 'Saxony Wool.'" Then the admission is made "that such underwear so manufactured and made is not composed wholly of wool or camel's hair." But, in defense, it is asserted that the practice complained of has been a general one in the trade and is well understood, and that it is one which is also customary with foreign manufacturers of such goods who ship them to this country. The case is one affecting all manufacturers of woolen knit goods, and they have resolved to present a united front in the matter and to combine in fighting the proceedings before the commission. Their object, as stated by them, is to have effaced from the record "the charge that they and each of them have been and are practicing any unfair methods of competition or deception to the public." Practically every knitting mill in the country engaged in making woolens is enlisted in the movement, and the decision of the question involved may have consequences far beyond the wiping out of many well-known trademarks and brands.

Does the Consumer Understand?

At the outset it is easy enough to show that no one in the trade, whether he be a jobber, wholesaler, or retailer, is in any doubt as to the makeup of the woolen knit wear which he deals in. Each of them knows that the terms "merino," "cashmere," "worsted," or "wool" applied to underwear or other knit goods does not mean that the articles are made wholly of wool or camel's hair, as the case may be. Quite a lot of them, in fact, which look like wool are made wholly of cotton, with a little shoddy on the outside to give the color and partly the feel that real woolen goods have. But this does not deceive the dealer, who may therefore be left out of the calculation. Then, again, so far as the consumer is concerned, it is easy enough to show that many of the goods containing only a certain percentage of wool in their composition, instead of being all wool, have decided merit and value. In fact, there are comparatively few knit goods made which are all wool, and there are many persons who, for one reason or another, do not wish to wear all-wool garments. The only question is whether it is fair to describe something as of wool when it contains only, say, 10 or 20 per cent. of that material, and whether the consumer is deceived by the term under which it is sold. The practice certainly opens the door to a kind of fraud if the consumer is not posted, but, of course, the fraud cannot be laid at the door of the producer if an unscrupulous dealer pretends that the composition of an article is what it is not. Should he, however, seek to bolster up his claim by using the manufacturer's misleading label or brand, it is difficult to see how the latter can be held entirely blameless. So the one question is whether the protection of the public calls for the abolition of an old-established trade practice.

Cotton Supplies and Fabrics.

After some quite sensational rocketing of cotton prices came a check during the past week. One explanation was that there had been overbuying. The great demand was for spots, which were at quite a large premium over contracts. Higher grades were most wanted, and of these there seems to be a marked scarcity. The weather conditions in the growing districts have continued to be otherwise than favorable in most instances, and this has been a further encouragement to those interested in higher prices. A concerted movement to increase prices still further came to notice during the week. It is fostered by the American Cotton Association, which proposes to have 2,000,000 bales of cotton withdrawn from market. Warehouse receipts for this amount are to be deposited in banks, and the cotton is to be withheld from sale until the association decides that prices are high enough to warrant such action. On the face of it this looks like a conspiracy for extortion. Cotton prices today are about five times what they were five years ago, and probably show a greater rise than any other commodity. In the face of this the proposition to increase the price more artificially looks as though those proposing it were a little afraid that prices cannot be maintained without resort to unusual methods. The plan is hardly likely to meet with more success than did the one to restrict acreage. It would be interesting to learn how much of the recent large profits in cotton inured to the benefit of growers and how much went to the speculators in the towns down South. The goods market keeps being pegged up as the price of cotton advances, to the manifest profit of the mills, which are now showing larger production. Print cloths have been selling on the basis of $1.20 a pound, which is sufficient to indicate the margin. Bleached and printed goods are rapidly rising to a parity with those in the gray. Orders for knit goods in quantity have been received.

Wool and Woolen Goods.

No lack of interest is shown in the auction sales of wool now in progress in London. The bidding has been quite active and the prices have ruled even higher than at the previous sales, especially for the finer grades. Buyers from this country secured a quantity of the better merinos. Tomorrow the auction of Government-owned wools will be resumed in Boston after a cessation for several months during which the domestic clip was marketed. The woolen mills, as appeared from the report of the Census Bureau published on Thursday, are increasingly active, and the amount of raw material they are using is larger than in prewar days. An interesting circumstance shown in the reports of the Department of Commerce is the growth in the exports of woolen manufactures. This includes shipments of blankets and men's, women's, and children's wearing apparel, which have been larger by about $15,000,000 for the first nine months of this year than in the same period in 1918. In the domestic market, the outlook for men's clothing for Spring continues very favorable. Complaint still continues as to the scarcity of serges and other wanted dress fabrics and of the high prices asked for such of them as can be obtained. For the next heavyweight season it is intimated that the mills will again allocate their supplies.

PROBLEM FOR THE STORE EXECUTIVE

The Effort of Trying to Prevent Subordinates from Selling Too Much or Too Little.

One of the most puzzling of all the problems which confront executives of dry goods stores throughout the country is how best to impart to their sales staff—if it be possible at all—that nice distinction between underselling and overselling which is so essential to the success of the business. It has been said of poets that they are born and not made, and most officials who have had in hand the training of sales help seem willing to concede that the same is true of store salesmen and saleswomen.

With the increase in the number of scientifically trained teachers of retail salesmanship there has come considerable improvement in methods of dealing with the shopping public on the part of men and women behind the store counters. It does not require any great amount of effort, however, to discover that a great deal has still to be done along this line, and the room for improvement is more likely to be found in the larger stores, where the element of personal touch between employer and employe is limited or missing, than in the smaller ones.

Of the two "evils" the average store executive is likely to be more lenient with overselling than underselling. It at least shows that the employe is trying to make sales, thereby doing what he or she is paid for. But, unless there is some rhyme or reason to the efforts of a sales person of this type, the results are apt frequently to prove a boomerang both to the store and the employe. There is an authenticated case on record, for instance, in which a store felt obliged to notify one of its customers that she was returning a considerable proportion of her purchases, mostly shoes. The letter went on to say in a tactful way that, while it valued the patronage of the customer, it felt that it was being imposed upon to some extent.

The reply was a scathing denunciation of the sales methods of the store and of a certain clerk in particular. Investigation in the store brought out the fact that a clerk in the shoe department, who had waited on the customer acceptably for several years, had conceived the idea of sending to her home shoes of the type in which he thought she would be interested and would probably keep. It was brought out that in a single month the customer had received twenty-two pairs in his way, all of which had been returned. The clerk, of course, was notified to stop that kind of "selling" at once, but it took considerable effort to mollify the customer and hold her business.

There is also the aggressive kind of clerk—usually a girl or woman—who apparently thinks that no merchandise can be sold without her forcing her own ideas upon the store's patrons. Let a customer choose a navy dress, for instance, and the clerk of the type in question at once sets out to tell her how much more attractive she would look in black or brown. The fact that her opinion might not have been asked does not seem to bother this kind of a clerk. She is there to sell goods, and she is going to sell them, customers' ideas on the matter notwithstanding. These are the kind of clerks to whom many women quickly capitulate—and then send back the things bought under duress.

Contrasted with the overselling clerk is the employe who never volunteers an opinion, and who seems incapable of giving one when asked to do so. This kind of sales person is the bane of the existence of many store executives, for there are few things that will lose a sale more quickly than the assumption on the part of the employe of a please-don't-bother-me-with-your-troubles attitude. Another problem for the men higher up is the type of clerk who assumes an apologetic air in showing merchandise, unwittingly giving the prospective customer the idea that the goods are not just right or that the prices are higher than elsewhere. This is often the result of an overdeveloped consciousness of self a kind of stage fright, but it is also asserted to be due frequently to the clerk's lack of knowledge of the merchandise she is trying to sell. Her apologetic meekness is really an appeal to the customer to overlook this self-consciousness or lack of familiarity with her wares, but the customer nine times out of ten puts the wrong construction on it and makes her purchases somewhere else. This, executives agree, is a type of underselling that is particularly dangerous, and more apt to do a store a lasting harm than the frank disinterest in a customer and her needs that is often met with.

While confessing themselves unable to discover any justifiable reason for underselling, more than one store executive will concede that overselling on the part of a clerk is frequently the fault of the customer. For instance, there is the kind of customer who looks askance at anything new that is brought out until it is almost passé. This type of woman is generally easy to recognize, for, regardless of how much money she may have to outfit herself, she always appears to be about half a dozen jumps behind the current mode. In a sense she is like the man who never would consent to use a shaving cream until, as a result of a camping accident in which he broke one arm and sprained the other wrist, he had to ask a salesman for the cream to shave him before returning home. The latter took advantage of the situation, as the story goes, and gained a new customer. Unfortunately, the clerk who is confronted with a customer of the kind in question has to work on the latter's mind in overcoming her prejudices, rather than on her physical being, and it is because of this that she is often likely to push her wares too hard and frighten the customer off. Or else the delivery department gets a request the following day to call for a package to be returned.

Then there is the suspicious variety of customer. Women of this type are like the little girl in the toy shop, who, when asked sharply by a weary clerk if she expected to get the earth with a red fence around it for a cent, requested the clerk to let her see it. These customers must be "shown" before a sale can be made. If the article under consideration should be a coat with a seal collar on it, they want to be assured over and over that it is real Hudson seal and not dyed rabbit. They want to be sure that the lining will wear for at least two seasons, that the seams are sewed with silk, that the color is going to be "good" again next Fall, and a dozen and one other things that less suspicious women could scarcely think of. Realizing what she is up against in cases of this kind, the average clerk will "lay it on thick," even if she departs slightly from the paths of truth in doing so. Where the cure for it all lies is the question.

Gray Goods Sales Small.

While individual sales in the local gray goods market yesterday were not large, in the aggregate they represented a pretty fair volume of merchandise. Both first and second hands were in the market as sellers of printcloths, the bulk of the business in which was done for near-by deliveries. Among the sales reported were 39-inch 80 squares at 30 cents, 72-76s at 25 cents, 68-72s at 23 cents, and 38½-inch 64-60s at 19¼ cents. In the sheetings 5.50-yard goods brought 15⅛ to 15¼ cents, depending on the seller and the delivery, while 48-square four-yard sheetings brought 20 cents for early 1920 shipment. Bids of the same price for goods for delivery during the remainder of this year apparently were unsuccessful. Fine-yarn cloths did not sell very freely during the day, but there was a fair demand for the clothing styles. In this business were sales of 39-inch 64-104, 4.20-yard sateens, for nearby delivery, at 36 cents.

Use of Cable Code Names.

In the notes prepared by the Far-Eastern Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce occurs the following: "The use of the cable code name as signature on cablegrams to foreign concerns is false economy unless the American concern has previously arranged for the identification of such signature by the addressee or has arranged for the recording of such code name with the American Consul for the district in which the addressee is located."

FOR WATERPROOFED GARBS.

Campaign to Begin to Popularize It for Outer Garments.

Of interest to manufacturing and retail clothiers will be the campaign to popularize the use of waterproof outer garments. The campaign starts with the opening of the next heavyweight piece goods season, and has been undertaken by a house that controls the cravenette process for this country. It produces finished goods that are guaranteed waterproof, and also does the processing of materials for other concerns.

In describing what the campaign will embrace the President of the company said:

"During the war, owing to the difficulties put in the way of manufacturing waterproof materials of the finer grades, the production of such goods was practically at a standstill. If a man or woman wished to buy a waterproof garment, all that was available was a plain rubber coat or one made of a rubberized material. With manufacturing facilities now restored to their normal basis, it will be possible to supply the usual range of waterproofed fabrics, and it is our intention to popularize their use to a far greater extent than formerly, since we have the advantage of a fresh start.

"In England," he said, "it is the exception rather than the rule for a customer to buy an overcoat or topcoat that is not waterproofed. The reason for this, of course, is because there is more rain there. Consequently the business of waterproofing is done on a very large scale abroad.

"It may have been noticed this Fall that there was more rainy weather, and it would seem as if our seasons have changed a little, so that we do not have the same dry, sunshiny weather of former years. For this reason we believe the clothing manufacturers and the retailers will welcome the movement, the purpose of which is to supply garments good for any kind of weather, rain or shine.

"The small cost necessary to convert a fabric into a waterproof material, however, is the main argument we have to give in the campaign that will be started. To process the material in an overcoat costs only 30 cents. On the overcoat itself this should amount to less than $1, so that means two garments, an overcoat and a raincoat, for the price of one article.

"The leading manufacturers of clothing who will co-operate with us in the campaign are enthusiastic over the prospects of the movement. Retailers who have been approached are sure that their customers will welcome the opportunity to provide themselves at a small additional cost with a garment that may be worn in any kind of weather. So far about 90 per cent. of the representative manufacturers have agreed to feature the double service garment."

GOOD LACES CALLED FOR.

Bulk of Nottingham's Business in Those of Best Quality.

Laces of the best quality are receiving the bulk of the attention of manufacturers of these goods in the Nottingham trade at the present time, according to Vice Consul Leroy Webber, who is stationed in that city. In fact, practically the entire production of the Nottingham mills is concentrated on them. There has been a steady call for this class of merchandise for some time, Mr. Webber says, both in the domestic and foreign markets, particularly the United States. Pleatings, flouncings, and wide "insertion" laces are most wanted, although the "binche" goods are finding a ready market in France. The net trade continues to remain well employed and there are many large orders on hand to be filled. Prices for all kinds of laces and nets are high, with the tendency still upward.

In the export trade, Mr. Webber reports, a fair amount of business is being received from the South American markets. Continental buyers are also making heavy purchases. Inquiries are being received from Austrian and German houses, but up to the time the report was made practically no orders had been placed. Most of the American buyers who have called at the Nottingham consulate this season say that the market is in a much better condition as regards prices, quantities, and deliveries than the Continental lace centres.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

The Same Story of Rising Prices Comes from All of Them.

The Yokohama raw silk market, owing to the heavy demand, has advanced to such an extent that Sinshiu No. 1 has reached the level of 2,800 yen per picul. The visible stock in the Japanese market, which has been sharply reduced, is now estimated at but 12,000 bales.

Cables received here by A. P. Villa & Bros., Inc., say that the Canton market also continues active, and that reelers are raising their prices almost daily. In consideration of the small balance left for the current season, prices are thought likely to go still higher. The Shanghai market is also advancing, and importers are buying in that market for shipment as far ahead as February and March next. Stocks of all grades of silk are unusually light for this time of the year, and the goods remaining are firmly held.

The steady increase in demand for Italian silks at Milan has forced prices up to the basis of 300 lire per kilo for "extra classicals." In the local market buying is again active, but it seems to be limited more or less to certain grades and sizes, such as 20-22s and the new style reeling of Canton silks, which are rapidly gaining favor in this country.

SATIN IN MILLINERY.

Smart Models in Which This is Used Shown by Manufacturers.

The newest item in the millinery field, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America, is satin. Evidence of it is seen everywhere, the bulletin says, and there are some very smart models in plainly fitted heavy lustrous satin being shown by the leading manufacturers here. It continues:

"This is the kind of thing that the buyers are calling for advanced deliveries. Large, dressy effects of satin are particularly attractive. One of the most effective trims on a large semi-mushroom of plainly fitted satin is kidskin. A wide, draped band of this material, in black, forms the side crown of this hat, on which roses of pink wool and foliage in natural shades are seen. Another good-looking large model has a conventional border of wool on the edge to give a brightening effect. A crown of black maline is fitted snugly over an under crown of black satin."

British Training for Brazilians.

Arrangements have been made by the English commercial delegation in Brazil whereby a number of Brazilian technical students will be placed in British factories in order that they may get acquainted with the manufacturing methods used and so become well trained for position afterward as agents in their own country. The British firms will pay the students sufficient salary to keep them while in England. The candidates will be selected from the following institutions: Polytechnic School of Rio de Janeiro, Polytechnic School of Sao Paulo, School of Mines in Ouro Preto, the Agricultural College of Piracicaba, and others that may later be designated by the Brazilian Government.

No Market for Ceylon Plumbago.

There is at present practically no market for Ceylon plumbago, according to Consul Walter A. Leonard at Colombo, and the shipments during the first half of this year were only 4,020 tons, compared with 15,452 during the year 1918, 27,047 tons in 1917, and over 33,000 tons in 1916. It is not anticipated that prices even approximating those ruling late in 1916 and early in 1917, when plumbago sold for as much as $500 a ton, will prevail again. Lump grain plumbago is now quoted at $85 to $175 a ton, and other prices are comparatively as low.

BRITISH FOREIGN TRADE.

The Country Is Buying Two-thirds More Than It Is Selling.

The analysis of British trade returns for September, made by the American Chamber of Commerce in London, shows that British exports fell by over £8,250,000, ($41,250,000,) as compared with the rise of £9,250,000 ($46,250,000) in August. The exports are little better, therefore, than in May, June, and July, and the hope inspired by the August spurt is not realized.

The actual figures for September, as officially recorded, were, in round figures:

Imports	£148,600,000	$743,000,000
Exports, British goods	65,800,000	329,000,000
Re-exports, imported goods	15,700,000	78,500,000

The adverse balance of trade for one months, therefore, amounted to £66,400,000, ($332,000,000,) and it will be seen that Great Britain is still buying two-thirds again as much as she is selling.

As regards imports, there were increases in the food, drink, and tobacco group and in raw materials, particularly cotton, wood and timber, wool and oil seeds, fats, &c. Manufactured articles, particularly leather, iron and steel, textiles, and paper also increased, causing the import curve for manufactured articles to rise sharply, after having dropped during July and August.

As the exports of strictly British products, manufactured articles showed the heaviest increase. Nearly half this increase is due to textiles, particularly cotton, wool, and silk. Iron and steel, metal manufactures, and machinery also advanced, as did food, drink and tobacco, and raw materials. Coal, coke, and manufactured fuel dropped 30,000 tons in quantity, despite a rise of almost £4,000,000 ($20,000,000) in value.

Viewed simply in the light of production, says the American Chamber, the position is all the worse when it is borne in mind that August is not only a holiday month but that this year there was the great coal strike in Yorkshire, which handicapped industry severely.

As against this, the British point out that the last three working days of September were hit by the railroad strike, and, inasmuch as the trade returns for any month are compiled from the Custom House register of documents, it is likely that the published figures are slightly less than the actual exports, because of the delay in receipt of documents at the Custom House during the strike period. The effect of the strike upon the actual exports will probably be more noticeable in the October returns.

Despite these modifying circumstances, there is no doubt, says the American Chamber of Commerce, that there was a falling off of actual exports during September, and that this was the result of less export production. The Chamber has many times before sounded the warning to American business men that if they wish to continue their exports to Great Britain and other foreign countries they must buy the goods and invest in the securities of those countries in order to put buying funds at their disposal. This is still just as true as in previous months, for Great Britain is still having to import vastly more than she can export.

On the other hand, there have recently been in England American representatives ready to buy British goods on a large scale, only to meet with disappointment because there were practically no British goods to be bought, and, further, British producers seemed to have no idea of what they could export to the United States, now or in the immediate future. If America is at last ready to buy, the question becomes more and more one for British producers to settle. If they cannot produce goods for export when markets are waiting for them, it will surely be their own responsibility.

DRESS INDUSTRY TOPICS.

To be Discussed at Coming Convention in Atlantic City.

June Rand of Los Angeles, Cal., one of the few women manufacturers of dresses in the United States, has accepted an invitation to speak at the convention of the Associated Dress Industries of America, which takes place at the Breakers, Atlantic City, on Dec. 2, 3, and 4. Miss Rand will speak on "The Future of Cotton Dresses."

The convention plans of the association are rapidly being completed, and Executive Director David N. Mosessohn yesterday predicted an attendance of over 350 manufacturers of dresses, manufacturers of raw materials, bankers, and others directly and indirectly affiliated with the women's, misses', and children's dress industry in the United States. He said, among other things, that there will be present delegates from every city in the United States where dresses are made, some coming from as far as the Pacific Coast. New York will send over 200 delegates.

"One of the most interesting features of the convention," said Mr. Mosessohn, "is the fact that not only will members of the organization be present—active and associate—but there will also be in attendance a number of manufacturers who have not yet affiliated themselves with this national trade body, but who want to learn what it has accomplished and what the plans are for the future before joining the organization. These manufacturers will be welcome. We want to have all the manufacturers, salesmen, buyers of importance and others who are interested in the dress industries with us at the convention. We want to hear their opinions on important matters affecting the trade, and by attending they will be doing a service to the industry in which they are engaged."

The convention will conclude with a dinner on the evening of Dec. 5.

Extra Profits on Diamonds.

Unusual profits are being reaped by the Dutch diamond trade as a result of the present foreign exchange situation. Rough diamonds are purchased almost exclusively in London, according to Commercial Attaché Paul L. Edwards, who is at The Hague, and are paid for in sterling. This medium at present is at a discount of about 10 per cent. in Amsterdam. The bulk of the diamonds cut and polished in Amsterdam are disposed of in the United States. They are customarily paid for in dollars, which are now at a premium of about 8 per cent. in Amsterdam, and it is on these two facts that the current profits are based. Orders now being received there indicate that the present heavy demand for diamonds from the United States will probably continue for several months.

Leaf Tobacco Holdings Decline.

A decline in the holdings of leaf tobacco by American manufacturers and dealers is indicated, as of Oct. 1, by preliminary statistics compiled by the United States Census Bureau. The figures show that on the date mentioned the manufacturers and dealers held 1,263,769,070 pounds, compared with 1,264,883,788 pounds on the corresponding date a year ago. On July 1 of this year they held 1,400,963,823 pounds, and on April 1, 1919, their holdings amounted to 1,627,233,876 pounds. The Oct. 1 total includes 848,556,444 pounds for which the marked weight—the weight at the time it was packed or baled—was reported, and 415,212,626 pounds for which the actual weight was given. In these quantities were 1,118,516,958 pounds of stemmed and 145,252,112 pounds of unstemmed leaf.

Germany Short of Dyes.

Anglo-American Trade for October, the bulletin of the American Chamber of Commerce in London, says that, far from being in a position to dump dyestuffs and other chemicals on American and British markets, Germany is actually short, and that when she has delivered to the Allies the quantities required by the peace treaty, there will be little left to export. Her dire need of coal and raw materials precludes the possibility of her becoming anything more than a weak competitor for at least a year. This is the conclusion reached by the Chairman of the Chamber's Committee on Drugs, Chemicals, and Dyestuffs, after a month of investigation in Germany.

CHANGE IN MEMPHIS STORE.

R. Sadowsky Buys Interest in Bry-Block Mercantile Company.

An interest in the Bry-Block Mercantile Company of Memphis, Tenn., has been purchased by R. Sadowsky, understood to be the largest manufacturer of women's garments in this city. This is the eighth store to be added to the group of representative retail houses which Mr. Sadowsky and his associates have acquired lately. No change in the management of the Memphis store will be made, except that I. D. Block, who is general manager, will also become President of the concern. This is in keeping with the policy which has governed in the case of the other stores, which are all ably managed by those who originally operated the businesses.

The principal advantages accruing to the establishments that have entered the group are understood to be the economy effected by the combined purchasing power of the stores and the mutual exchange of valuable merchandising experience. One of the concerns since entering the combination is reported to have doubled its sales. Methods found successful in one store are used in others with equal benefit, so that through the common fund of experience the various retail concerns are able to build up sales in all departments.

Besides the Bry-Block store Mr. Sadowsky is interested in the Bailey Company of Cleveland, the Rosenbaum Company of Pittsburgh, Frank & Seder of Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, the B. Nugent & Brother Dry Goods Company of St. Louis, the Gus Blass Company of Little Rock, the Wolff & Marx Company of San Antonio, and Ed Schuster & Co. of Milwaukee.

The success which has attended the combined effort of the stores has made such an impression in retail circles that Mr. Sadowsky is known to have been approached by several other well-established concerns who are anxious to join the group. Announcement of further additions to the retail combination will probably be made later.

EDUCATION IS NEEDED.

Applicable to the Customer Abroad and the Shipper Here.

The need for education along lines of America's commercial and industrial capabilities in the Karachi Consular District in India is well illustrated, Consul E. Verne Richardson believes, in the case where a large merchant confessed that he did not know the United States produced cotton piece goods. His companion, who was also a wealthy Indian, was a little better informed, but believed that the price of goods similar to British manufacture was so much higher that he could not buy them.

In individual cases, it seems, excellent educative work is being done by the direct representatives of American firms who are now in that country, but each of these men preaches from a limited text prescribed by his immediate affiliations, while it is a general scheme of education that is urgently needed. American goods in many instances are still suffering from the old abuse of considering "anything good enough for India." Efficiency and time of delivery are the two important factors in getting Indian trade, and price does not cut so large a figure.

The article supplied must also be suitable to the needs of the country. Providing an extra seat at the back of a runabout automobile is one suggestion offered to take care of the servant who travels with his master. Another instance cited is that of supplying a water cart for steam roller or concrete mixing machines so that water may be carried along. There are no water supply hydrants in India.

INTERESTING THE WORKER.

Way in Which a British Manufacturer Is Going About It.

The cultivation of the personal touch between those who direct and those who perform the work in each of the industries is regarded by a manufacturer in Great Britain, according to Trade Commissioner Leonard B. Gary, as one of the principal needs for increasing production. This manufacturer, who employs 10,000 workers, has conceived the plan of meeting the men at their different trades unions and talking to them for the purpose of finding out just what their difficulties are, and how their work can be made more interesting.

As one of the steps to inspire the employes with interest in their work this manufacturer plans to have motion pictures made which will show his product from the raw state to the consumer. As he is in the woolen business this will embrace pictures of combing, sorting, scouring, and the spinning of wool yarn, the weaving, dyeing, packing, shipping, and the wholesale and retail methods used in the sale of the finished product. Each individual worker, he thinks, will visualize the complete process and, by doing so, the strain of his particular task will be lightened, and he will have more interest in his work.

THINK PRICES TOO HIGH.

This and Belief They Will Drop Cut Down Mexican Buying.

American merchandise, particularly various kinds of dry goods, is coming into disfavor in Mexico as a result of the high prices that are asked in this country. From Mazatlan, Sinaloa, Vice Consul Z. E. Jones has sent to the Department of Commerce a report in which he sets forth the situation, which seems to apply particularly to the West Coast of Mexico. The slump in the purchases of American silks in that part of Mexico appears to have been the most marked so far, he says. Mr. Jones continues:

"The average local merchant, who usually has a limited amount of money to invest in his stock, cannot afford to stock up on good grades of merchandise at prices which make it likely to prove prohibitive to the Mexican trade. Another consideration is that merchants in general are looking for a drop in prices sooner or later, and are careful about buying more than the trade would absorb before the expected changes occur. As a result of this condition, merchants are expecting to buy only the cheaper grades of merchandise until prices show signs of improving."

Ceylon's Tea Shipments Drop.

Tea shipments from Ceylon last year were the smallest in ten years, according to figures forwarded to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce by Consul Walker J. Leonard, who is stationed at Colombo. Exports for 1918 amounted to only 181,000,000 pounds, compared with 195,000,000 pounds in 1917. Compared with the record exports of 1915, which totaled 215,000,000 pounds, the 1918 shipments made an especially poor showing. Exports to the United Kingdom were under the supervision of the Ceylon Tea Commissioner, representing the British Food Controller in London, who requisitioned 50 per cent. of the entire output. No private shipments were permitted.

MEETING STRIKE EFFECTS.

A British Plan for Reducing Unavoidable Unemployment.

Trade Commissioner Henry F. Grady, London, has forwarded to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce details of a plan which has been joined in by many of the leading British manufacturers in order to keep the industries going in times of industrial stress and at the same time to reduce unemployment to the lowest possible extent. The manufacturers in the movement are members of the Federation of British Industries, which has twenty-one branches throughout the country, with headquarters in London to act as a clearing house for materials and men. The co-operation of the British Government in the project has been assured.

During the recent railway strike in Great Britain, Mr. Grady reports, after consulting with the Government the federation concentrated on keeping industry running as long as possible, so as to reduce unavoidable unemployment or, where this was impossible, to aid in administering the State scheme for unemployment, and to use other means of alleviating industrial distress.

After having taken several important preliminary steps, including requests to conserve material and fuel by reducing the working day, to set aside a certain amount of fuel for the workmen, &c., the federation adapted its organization to help the manufacturers keep their plants open. Federation staffs in all districts were increased, with the intention of strengthening the district organizations in order that they would form a complete network throughout the industrial areas. Several other important steps were taken, all of which were designed to carry out the purposes of the federation with the expenditure of a minimum of time and effort.

Before the strike came to a close, Mr. Grady further says, a mass of information had been received. When this had been classified and distributed steps were taken to deal with specific difficulties. Replies received by the federation from manufacturers showed a readiness to assist in the administration of the unemployment donation whenever it becomes necessary. After one week of the strike the federation summed up its reports of the effect the trouble was having on the various trades, with this result:

Iron and Steel.—The majority of firms have been affected. It has been necessary to damp down the furnaces in most cases as a safeguard against a prolonged strike. The furnaces are thus kept warm, and the available sources of fuel are being used in this manner. Lack of storage facilities (dumping) is also creating difficulties for carrying on in mining, as well as steel and iron.

Glass.—The above conditions apply to glass. Fuel will be used to maintain the heat of the furnaces; otherwise if the furnaces are cold, it will take six to eight weeks to reheat.

Textiles.—The majority of firms can carry on full time for at least a considerable period with present supplies.

Engineering.—Generally very little affected by the railway strike. Many of the firms are depending on the local power stations for gas and electricity. Most of these, however, appear to have at least 28 days' supply available.

Food Products.—A shortage of sugar; otherwise satisfactory.

Leather.—No immediate effect.

Enamel Protects Metals.

Special interest was attached to a black paint or enamel shown at the Shipping Engineering and Machinery Exhibition in London which, after seven years' test in England, appeared to be unaffected by the action of the atmosphere and water. The enamel is understood to withstand 700 degrees Fahrenheit of heat, 50 per cent. sulphuric acid, is a nonconductor and thus resists electrolysis, and has a covering capacity up to 13,000 square feet a hundredweight. Another exhibit consisted of concrete which had been rendered waterproof by a special paint impervious to moisture and unaffected by oils.

WHEN IN DOUBT ASK A RED CIRCLE BOOTH

War Camp Community Service Remodeling Its Work to Suit Peace Times.

MILLIONS OF QUESTIONS

Local Workers Supplied with Loose-Leaf Answer Books That Tell Almost Everything.

Getting a line on New York City and keeping that line unfailingly straight is the highly specialized job of a group of sturdy workers enrolled under the banner of the New York War Camp Community Service. Human interrogation-points are their daily concern. Formerly khaki-clad, or in the navy's blue, there is now an ever-increasing proportion of civies.

Thousands of men who are out of the uniform again look back upon their time in service and recall as shining moments their appeals to some Red Cross worker when they were seized with an attack of loneliness, or that dazed puzzlement that gets the stranger in the big city, or when a husky army appetite was demanding the wherewithal to satisfy itself, and the soldier or the sailor felt impelled to find a good, inexpensive restaurant—and, in the language of the service, to find it quick.

Often looming bigger in their minds than the actual information given was the ready spirit of helpfulness shown.

"The lady that told me about that bus trip around town," said one husky doughboy, "seemed to figure out just the kind of a time that would please me—made me feel sort of like some one was looking out for me all afternoon, instead of just knocking 'round town, the way I thought I'd be going."

The first Red Circle booth was placed in the Pennsylvania Station in July, 1918. It was an emergency service, established to help on their way the thousands of men, mostly strangers to New York, who came pouring through the station from the surrounding camps, to their brief "pass" in town.

Just two days and two nights were spent setting up and manning that pioneer booth—with women workers. When a prominent New York architect was asked to submit sketches for the design of the booth, with the added statement that they were needed in a couple of hours, he balked at what he called the impossible. But he did the impossible and a carpenter built the booth that night. The first coat of paint was dashed on in the morning, the second followed the same night, and, with walls still wet, the booth was put in place in the early hours of the second day. The emergency call for volunteer workers brought a corps of capable women, eager to fill the breach, and the Information Booth Service was launched.

Certain questions the booth workers were well prepared to answer, such as inquiries regarding what to do and what to see, and where to eat and sleep. They were well posted on these points, as these were things provided for by the War Camp Service itself, in the form of service units, a big hotel for enlisted men and special dances galore.

But a host of other questions came flying through the little window. The workers, nothing daunted, made ready to answer—all and sundry. After facing several requests for information as to the nearest drugstore, the nearest cobbler, and the nearest tailoring establishment where one could have repairs made to a certain very necessary part of one's costume, a hurried canvass of the neighborhood was in order, after which an inventory was made of such addresses and others for future reference. This method of local scouting was subsequently adopted by each booth in turn. For in a short time the first booth had successors, and there were ten, and twenty—and finally twenty-five—a chain of reliable information centres for the uniformed stranger in town.

Information booth workers are found to be very proud of their little dolls' houses. On cold days a glowing electric heater throws a comforting warmth into chilly corners. Leaflets, cards, and booklets bearing the insignia of the Community Service are neatly stacked in racks along the walls. A shelf boasts as businesslike an array of files and writing material as the best regulated office desk.

"The real treasure of the booth," explained one Community Service worker, "is the loose-leaf file. When I recall the early days and the astonishing variety of questions shot through that window, questions which we had to answer as best we might on the spur of the moment, I look with something like awe at this fat little book of facts now at our disposal. It is all arranged under headings, and I do believe that everything, or very close to everything, that we can ever be asked about is included in this blessed book. Facts are checked up constantly at the main office and corrected pages sent out to all booths for insertion in the books, which are loose leaf for that reason. In this way no information need be given out from any booth that has not been first officially verified at headquarters.

"Just glance at some of the headings—Transportation, including bus trips, ferries, trolley routes, and taxis; Sightseeing Trips; Clothing; Amusements; Hotels; Churches; Theatres; Employment. And between the lines on every page are hundreds of details that every worker reads into her information as the result of her actual experience. For the inquiry of every applicant must be treated as a separate entity. Besides the bald fact he says he wants, there is his individual background of need, plus such factors as, perhaps, loneliness, discouragement, or perplexity.

"Here is where it is proved that the real booth worker is born and not made. Instinctive sympathy and a tactful way of meeting every applicant is where the truly successful worker scores. And our workers are that kind or they don't last on the job. In any case they all go through a preliminary course of training, before they are sent to a booth, so that the public does not suffer from their inexperience.

"There was the gentle little lady with her daughter who had come to New York from a distant State to see the sailor son and brother whose ship was due in this port. They wanted to know just when his ship would arrive. Telephoning revealed the disconcerting fact that the ship was four days late, and a mild panic promptly seized the strangers. Their frugal budget did not allow for extra days in this most extravagant of cities. But we surprised them by outlining four days of sightseeing that would remain red-letter days in their memory, and yet leave them enough for the fare home. Arrangements were made for them to stay at an economical hostess house of the Y. W. C. A., and they set off rejoicing. A few days later I encountered them, happy and busy, and was hailed as an old friend, and I'm sure they meant every word of it when they said they would remember New York as 'the city that made strangers happy.'"

Like a regular fairy tale reads the story that comes from one booth. A lady left her card, with the request that her address be given to any lonely soldier that turned up looking for a homey time. She explained to a Community Service representative, who called at her house the next day, that their only son had died just before the war, and that she and her husband felt a keen interest in all the mothers' sons who were going into the great conflict, even as their own son might have gone. So a lonely soldier boy was sent to that home for a family dinner. Several weeks later he reappeared, radiantly happy, at the booth, announcing: "I sure have a lot to thank you people for. I struck this burg feeling mighty down, with no one to care even whether I came back from the fight or not—and now, I've got a family! Those folks figured that they had lost their son, and I hadn't any parents, so they just went to work and adopted me!"

Funny anecdotes abound, if the booth workers have time to remember and recount them—as, for instance, the case of the lady who had sold a dog to an officer and wished to locate her pet—no, she did not know the officer's name or his branch of the service, or the name of his camp! The name of a camp some forty miles away was suggested at the booth and the rest was left to Providence.

Since August, 1918, the booths have rendered service to more than 800,000. The reports since March, 1919, have specified whether service was given to uniformed men or civilians. Since that date 348,000 soldiers and sailors and 116,000 civilians have been served, a total of 464,000 persons. The booths are proving increasingly popular, not only with civilians who were once in khaki or blue, but the general public is realizing the solid value of the information Booth Service.

Community Service is meeting this demand with the same spirit and devotion that marked the record made by the women workers who "manned" the booths during the war.

"The Red Circle Booths are taking off their war paint," said Harry D. Robins, to whose efforts the Information Service owes its high efficiency. "Instead of the slogan 'Official Information for Soldiers-Sailors-Marines' is now displayed the peacetime version, 'Information About Everything for Everybody.'

"Uneasiness has been expressed by both civilians and uniformed men over the possible discontinuance of the booth service. It is shown that there is just as much need for such a service in community life as there was in the war emergency, and perhaps more.

"The red circle booths have become a very real help to thousands who live in New York and other thousands who visit the city. With the increased inquiries that each day brings, hundreds of thousands more inquirers will see in the booths a big, broad service that they want and need. The single fact that there are from two to three hundred thousand strangers in New York every day from all parts of the United States and from other countries shows the imperative need for some such service to civilians as Community Service is now rendering through its information booths. It is announced that there will be a standing quota of more than 5,000 sailors of the navy and merchant marine in the neighborhood of the city, besides a large number of soldiers from the hospitals and nearby camps, whose needs must be considered.

"A significant fact about this branch of Community Service," continued Mr. Robins, "is the eagerness of the workers themselves for the work to continue. These volunteers have caught the real spirit of service. They have responded loyally to every opportunity to perform a service for their fellows. And they want to keep on. Personal inconvenience in arranging their own affairs so as to meet their schedule of work, vicissitudes of rain and snow (which have not kept them from their work)—nothing has daunted them. They are determined to help, through Community Service, all their brothers and sisters in this great community."

More than 300 volunteer workers have enlisted for the Information Booth Service and all are convinced of its value in the permanent program of Community Service.

New York's finest must look to their laurels, or, with visiting strangers seeking information it will no longer be: "Ask a policeman," but "Ask in the information booth."

BIG WAR ATHLETICS BILL.

Y. M. C. A. Bought $2,785,196 in Equipment for Army and Navy.

For the use of the army and navy during the war the Y. M. C. A. bought $2,785,196 in athletic equipment and its officials said yesterday that they believed this to have been the largest order of its kind ever placed by a single organization. The figure represented goods that were given away in foreign countries and does not include the quantities disposed of in the camps at home.

Of this enormous bill 80 per cent. was distributed between Jan. 1 and June 30, 1919. Soldiers in Siberia, in Belgium, France, Italy, England or the Near East received their quota of supplies.

Baseball heads the list. No less than 1,078,191 separate articles of baseball paraphernalia go to make up the list, and the bill for this ran to $1,434,528.67. League balls totaled 719,174, and indoor baseballs, 47,004. In the matter of bats, the invoice shows 115,913 for outdoor willows, and 21,926 for indoor lumber.

The sum of $364,272.64 was paid for football equipment. For boxing gloves, a few medicine balls, punching balls, wrestling mats, &c., an expenditure of $207,678.50 was made. Basket ball was the fourth largest item with a total of $193,094.66.

The grand total for these four sports enumerated was $2,201,574.47, leaving a balance of $315,537.80 which was divided among equipment for tennis, golf, polo, volley ball, cage ball, ping pong, quoits, track and field sports, bowling, and the incidentals necessary for officials such as whistles, stop watches, megaphones.

Quite separate and distinct from another department of recreation known as "parlor games" and including cards, checkers, and dominoes, which are listed under the "hut equipment" department, the above figures comprise expenditures from the athletic department only.

WANTS TO SEE THE 'NEW' PRINCE

One Oldtime English Actor Here Who Remembers Edward VII. in India.

A FEW REMINISCENCES

Of a Notable Visit and a Democratic Prince of Wales in the Days When Democratic Princes Were Few.

Living in modest comfort, in the Washington Heights section of the city, is an old actor who would like nothing better than to see the "new" Prince of Wales when he visits New York.

In the daily press are statements of the democratic tendency of "Prince Eddy," but it is not possible for him to have more of this virtue of democracy than had his grandfather, according to Henry E. Walton, whom old New Yorkers will remember as Ravennes, the big thief in "Erminie's" famous long run at the Casino.

"King Edward was the King of Democrats," said he recently. "I have lived the allotted three score and ten—and a 'bittock'—as my countrymen would say. I have traveled far and seen a good many things, and I have come to the conclusion that to be a good democrat one must be a gentleman—as I define it, one who respects the feelings of others. And this definition entitles Albert Edward first to the title of Prince and later of king of Democrats."

Speaking of the time when Edward VII., as Prince of Wales, made his triumphal visit to India, in 1875-6, and the English Dramatic Company, under the auspices of the Prince of Wales, opened their season in Calcutta, he said:

"The Prince arrived at the beginning of the year. I recall the landing from the Serapis at sunset time, with the members of the company and hundreds of thousands of people—native kings and princes, army and navy officers, &c., assembled—the future King of England recognized Charles Mathews, a member of our company—he was a great favorite of his—and waved his hand, calling out: 'Hello, Charlie. I'll see you tonight'—then the cavalcade went on.

"That night the performance was about to begin when an equerry rode up to the theatre, requesting that the company kindly delay the performance for ten minutes. Sure enough, punctual to the moment—punctuality being a democratic virtue in princes—he and his suite entered the box within an hour after his actual landing. He had changed his seagoing attire, got into evening clothes, and hastily swallowed a sandwich and a 'peg,' and, with the inevitable cigar in hand, stood smiling and bowing before the delighted audience.

"On command night, when a special performance was given for the Prince of Wales a fortnight after his arrival, we gave 'Used Up.' Charles Mathews played the 'comedy' that night. Boxes sold as high as £100. The rest of the theatre was £3 a seat, or $15—and that was a long time ago, when such prices were unheard of.

"Stewart Hog, then Chief Commissioner of Police of Calcutta, disliked the idea of showing in the native princes, therefore to the stage director was delegated the duty of receiving them at the gate of the compound—among them the Maharajah of Reewah, King of Kashmir, a very handsome man of pale-olive complexion, dressed all in white, with a magnificent diamond flashing in his turban. Another striking figure was the Maharajah of Vizanagram, with a crown eight inches high, set with immense precious stones, his neck encircled with ropes of rubies and emeralds, strung like robins' eggs.

"The visit to India of the then Prince of Wales was semi-political in character—the indians wished to see the great Shazadhar (Great Prince.) He made a short tour of India, and the Durbar took place during his stay.

"His visit paved the way for the proclamation, in 1877, of Queen Victoria as Empress of India. George Titheridge, leading man of our company, dressed in herald's costume, read the proclamation. It was in the open air in Calcutta before the assembled kings and princes of India, with foreign consuls representing the nations of the world, &c.

"I remember how the Prince was lauded and feted in India, from State affairs of regal, barbaric splendor to the ladies who fought for the orange peel from his plate. If he could have been spoiled the visit to India would have done it. But he remained in all his actions democratic and simple.

"He liked to walk, or at most to take a cab, like any other man, and he was generally seen smoking a big cigar. If he went to a theatre or music hall he laughed and applauded with great gusto. He was loved by all the performers. If particularly pleased with an artist, he would send his equerry to compliment him or her. He was a constant visitor at the Savage Club, where he took the chair at the Press Dinner—in fact, he was seen everywhere. His name was on every charity list—and he never forgot a face.

"In fact, voices were raised against the future King—he was too democratic, it was said, by some—too much a lover of the people. 'A little more standoffishness, please,' was the cry from certain quarters.

"So the 'new' Prince of Wales, if he is simple, kindly, and democratic, and if, by these qualities he endears himself to all with whom he comes into contact, is only following in the footsteps of his grandfather," says Mr. Walton

Our Entire Stock of Deep Silk Fringes

AT COST

Along in May, when our buyer purchased these fringes, he had two definite ideas in mind. One was that prices would be much higher as the season advanced. And this has happened. The other was that the great demand for fringe would exceed the supply. We are not altogether sure now that it will.

Rather than find later in the season that our buyer had allowed his enthusiasm to carry him too far, we will offer our entire stock at cost—exactly. And offer it now, at the height of the season.

THE TURKISH MANDATE.

The article by Mr. MORGENTHAU in today's issue of THE TIMES MAGAZINE presents in admirable form the compelling and unanswerable argument for the expulsion of the Turk from Europe. "The Turk is the habitual criminal of history," he says, whose promises to reform are abundant in time of trouble, but have invariably been repudiated; there is no more reason to believe them now than in 1856, or 1878, or 1908. "Turkey is not reformable." The Turkish character has some admirable points, but these are displayed more satisfactorily when the Turk is in a position of political inferiority. As a political power the Turks must be driven out of Europe—a step which would mean the gradual emigration of a large part of the Turkish population still living on the European side of the Strait—and sent back to the interior of Anatolia, where they have least chance to do further harm.

No unbiased reader of Mr. MORGENTHAU'S argument can fail to be convinced of the desirability of this end. The only question is whether it can most suitably be accomplished by the plan favored by Mr. MORGENTHAU—the assumption by the United States of a mandate for Thrace and Constantinople, Anatolia (except a small area around Smyrna) and Armenia; the three administrative districts to be separated on account of local conditions, but joined together under a single central government at Constantinople. The Sultan would by this plan be exiled to Brussa or Konich in Asia Minor, and "under proper mandatory control would retain religious and political sovereignty over the Turkish people in Anatolia."

It may be said at the outset that the Turks do not share Mr. MORGENTHAU'S confidence that such a plan would put them in their place. Indeed, one of the three or four strong currents of sentiment favoring a unitary American mandate is that of the Turks and their friends, who appear to think that such a solution would be the best way out for them. And other supporters of the unitary mandate do not talk of removing the Sultan from Constantinople. One reason or another—all specious—is given for his retention, but they do not want him out. If the Sultan stays in Constantinople Turkish functionaries would stay with him. Turkish political influence, with its infinite variety of corruption, would still be strong.

The Turks do not want to be partitioned among the great Powers. Above all, they do not want to see the Armenians freed, nor any more Turkish territory lost to the Greeks. The Greeks are the natural heirs of Constantinople, second only to the Turks, and not so very far second, among the various races that make up the population; destined, perhaps, to surpass them if the passing of Turkish political power should be followed by the usual migration. Moreover, the Greek element is the most energetic in and around the city. The Aegean coast and the northwestern section of Anatolia, ancient seats of Greek culture, have a Greek population which in some districts considerably outnumbers the Turks, and in the aggregate is large enough to make the transference of these districts to Greece immediately practicable. Greek rule means progress, but the unitary mandate would work to the disadvantage of this race, which is the hope of the whole region from the Bosporus to the Maeander.

Hostility to Greece is one reason why the Turks favor an American mandate, and, unhappily, it is also a motive among some of the American advocates of the theory. "The large missionary and educational interests of the United States in Anatolia must be adequately protected," says Mr. MORGENTHAU, "and it is illusory to imagine that this can be done if Anatolia is subjected to Greek, French, or Italian sovereignty." It certainly seems an unwarranted presumption that the French and Italian Governments would fail to give proper protection to any legitimate activities of American teachers and missionaries. If the Greeks should fail to do so, it would be because of a conflict of opinion as to the frontier of legitimacy.

Above all of which is the question whether we should govern the residue of Turkey for the advantage of its peoples, particularly its progressive and Christian peoples, or for the advantage of "our large missionary and educational interests." American sentiment no longer looks with favor on a State-supported Church or a Church-controlled State.

Without doubt an American mandate would promote the commercial development of Anatolia, to the great profit of American and European business men. But Mr. MORGENTHAU places the matter rather upon a philanthropic basis; he does not seem to think it would be worth while purely as a commercial venture. It could be financed—he thinks three or four hundred million dollars would suffice; others say a billion—"by issues of bonds against the resources of the territories involved. If the United States held the mandate there would be no difficulty in floating such issues." None at all; but they would be sold by the American indorsement, and not by the Anatolian revenues. If, as he says, "the commercial situation is of little importance to us," the expenditure involved would hardly command public approval.

Finally, it is argued, and with reason, that America is a world Power with world duties. England and France are already straining their resources to police territories in process of development; Italy might find heavy engagements in Anatolia too great a strain; Greece, for the moment, will have her hands full if she gets the territories, aside from the Strait, to which she is entitled on racial considerations. What Greece can do in twenty years is another matter. We might be able to keep order in an important strategic centre by taking over the whole territory, but in doing so we should be certain to strengthen the Turk. And in removing the European jealousies which might arise if Turkey were divided we should probably divert them all upon ourselves as the holders of a region so bitterly disputed in times past.

The unitary mandate would suit the Turks, the missionaries, some diplomats who could transfer their worries to our shoulders, and the holders of Turkish bonds, present and future. It would not suit the Christians whom the Turks oppress; it would hardly be likely to suit the American taxpayer; it might lead to a solidification of European sentiment against us. Better arguments for it must be advanced than any that have been heard as yet.

THE LONG, DARK YEAR.

It will be a year on Tuesday next since hostilities in the Great War came to an end in France with the signing of the armistice. The German Emperor had abdicated on Nov. 9, and Emperor CHARLES of Austria-Hungary surrendered his crown on the day the German plenipotentiaries signed the historic document that stilled the roar of cannon in France and Flanders and wherever the troops of America and her allies faced their enemy. Crowns fell in every German State. The revolution came as the Kaiser crossed the frontier to Holland. On Nov. 16 a Government of the people was formed in Germany with FRIEDRICH EBERT at its head. Forthwith it had to deal with the Spartacans, whose evil inspiration came from the Russian Bolsheviki, but by the middle of January of this year the streets of Berlin had been cleared with machine guns and the new Government was secure. The Czecho-slovak Republic was proclaimed in Prague on Oct. 28, the Polish Republic at Cracow on Nov. 9. In the end of that month a republic was set up in Lithuania. The Montenegrin Assembly declared for union with Serbia under King PETER on Dec. 2.

Royalty had not entirely passed in Europe, but the young nations turned joyously to republicanism. "It will be a new world in this twentieth century," wrote the veteran FREDERIC HARRISON about this time. "Shall we be new men, new women, worthy to use it rightly?" And, looking back over his long life, he said:

> In these 37 years the change has been as great as in 700 years since Magna Charta. When I was a boy the only republic was in America. Russia, it was thought, might overwhelm Europe.

That is what the Bolsheviki, under LENIN and TROTZKY, are planning to do in the new era heralded and celebrated by Mr. HARRISON, and the menace is still something more than a vapor on the horizon. Statesmanship must grapple with it. On the eve of negotiations to draw up a peace treaty, President WILSON—the occasion of his address was the announcement of the armistice to Congress—proclaimed his faith in the establishment of the new era in the following eloquent passage:

> The great nations which associated themselves to destroy the arbitrary power of the military caste of Germany have now definitely united in the common purpose to set up such a peace as will satisfy the longing of the whole world for disinterested justice, embodied in settlements which are based upon something much better and more lasting than the selfish competitive interests of powerful States.

Russia had to be left out of the preliminaries, with a dubious prospect that her people would soon realize the blessings of peace and industry and the boon of "disinterested justice." Millions of Russians had gone mad with their new-won liberty, and the armed mobs of their leaders were running amuck, cruelly tyrannizing over an impotent majority. But the cause of the majority was not lost. Eight days after the armistice that brought peace to Western Europe Admiral KOLCHAK became virtual dictator of the great body of the Russian people and commander of the All-Russian army and fleet, with an organized Government at Omsk; while in the south, on Nov. 20, General DENIKIN captured Kiev, overturned the Ukrainian Government, and began his robust campaign against the Soviet Government.

While civil war desolated Russia and many thousands perished of hunger and cold, and while little wars blazed up in other parts of Europe and new republics were shaken in the convulsions that the negotiators at Paris had no time to deal with, the framing of the great Treaty went on and the League of Nations was grafted on it. Slow seemed the deliberations, leisurely so, as if the representatives of the Allies were deaf to the turmoil elsewhere and blind to the misery that was reducing millions to despair. But at last the work was done, and on June 28, 1919, the formal ceremony of signing took place in the Hall of Mirrors at Versailles. From Paris President WILSON cabled an address to the American people in which he said of the consummation of the long drawn out and difficult negotiations:

> It is more than a treaty of peace with Germany. It liberates great peoples who have never before been able to find the way to liberty. It ends, once for all, an old and intolerable order under which small groups of selfish men could use the peoples of great empires to serve their ambition for power and dominion. It associates the free Governments of the world in a permanent League in which they are pledged to use their united power to maintain peace by maintaining right and justice.

More than four months have passed since that solemn ceremony in the Hall of Mirrors, but the momentous Treaty, with its League of Nations, the hope of a distracted world, is still unratified by the United States, which was the last nation to enter the war. Great Britain ratified as long ago as July 31, Belgium on Aug. 3, and France on Oct. 13. Japan has ratified. The King of Italy signed on Oct. 7, but the Italian Parliament must give its approval before the compact becomes a law of the realm. France and Great Britain are marking time, waiting for the United States to make up its mind. As soon as the Senate ratifies the Treaty will become effective. In this belated hour in America there sounds like an echo of hope that simple but noble sentiment uttered by President POINCARE at the celebration in Paris of the redemption and return of Alsace and Lorraine: "All honor to the dead, the immortal ones who shall teach us how to live."

AN ATTIC ORATOR.

Oldsters must regret that in their green, unknowing youth their small Latin and less Greek could not have been enlarged and reinforced by the Loeb Classical Library. The "ponies" of the eminent Mr. BOHN were the only help of the dense and the indolent student of the classics. To consult a "crib" was a wickedness much frowned on; and, indeed, there was in crib language a kind of dried and heratic solemnity of diction and phrase, never more solemnly absurd than in translating chartered libertines like ARISTOPHANES and PLAUTUS. The incautious consulter of the "horse" was pretty sure to betray himself to the cynical professor. What a pity it was that Latin and Greek as literature were known in no American classroom. Grammar for the sake of grammar—what a dead vast of ennui did the grammarians condemn us to! Let the wiser youngsters of today congratulate themselves that they escaped that lovely little treatise in the finest print, ANDREWS and STODDARD'S Latin grammar, for example, with its interminable lists of words and exceptions wherefor neither the English nor the Greek alphabet was quite long enough.

What futile years spent in learning things best forgotten, and in neglecting wholly the literary, the comparative-literary, the human, the artistic and archaeological charm of Greek and Latin writers as they can be studied now! With Mr. LOEB'S help you can now get a clear, intelligible, and idiomatic translation of Greek and Latin writers. There is the text in good, honest, legible, and not eye-offending Greek characters on one side. There is the English equivalent on the other. Why does anybody object to a translation? Why should anybody whose blood is warm within break his back and blear his eyes in "looking up" words in Liddell and Scott or Dr. Andrews?—words whose meaning he will be sure to forget unless they occur so frequently that he can't help remembering them. What pleasant FERDINAND BOCHER of Harvard said about French is just as true of any other language. "What is the use," he would ask in effect, "of "hunting up words in a French dictionary? If they are important and common enough, you will find out their meaning for yourself. If they aren't, why not find some other way of wasting your time?"

Professor CHARLES D. ADAMS, the distinguished Dartmouth Grecian, is the English translator of the three speeches of AESCHINES. Now, there are some of us who would scarcely borrow money to entertain any of the Attic orators. There is much that is dreary, and there is a great deal too much that is simply virulent, abusive, and false about these illustrious gentlemen. Still, they are like our rhetoricians in Congress in many respects. They seem to have "withheld their speeches for publication." They doctored them. The spoken and the written speech seem to have been often different. A wearisome habit of infuriated, bitter political hatreds and personal slanders breathes through them. And yet open Aeschines, certainly not the greatest of them, and on the unpopular side in politics. He was a civil service clerk, a soldier, a tragic actor. It is curious to find ARISTODEMUS, sometime a member of the same theatrical company, a company consisting of three members, with AESCHINES, paving the way, unofficially, for peace negotiations between the Greek States and PHILIP of Macedon, and AESCHINES one of the ten ambassadors to PHILIP. One almost thinks that a tragic actor in the fourth century B. C. had as great a genius for politics as the French journalist of today.

But let us hear our old tragedian, whose best gift as a speaker seems to have been his "art," as Professor ADAMS says, "of putting himself readily upon the most familiar terms with his audience; he likes to talk the matter over with them rather than to declaim to them; his only fault here is a tendency to assume something of the didactic tone of the schoolmaster":

> This is DEMOSTHENES'S personal and peculiar way of doing things. Other deceivers, when they are lying, try to speak in vague and ambiguous terms, afraid of being convicted; but DEMOSTHENES, when he is cheating you, first adds an oath to his lie, calling down destruction on himself; and, secondly, predicting an event that he knows will never happen, he dares to tell the date of it; and he tells the names of men, when he has never so much as seen their faces, deceiving your ears and imitating men who tell the truth. And this, indeed, is another reason why he richly deserves your hatred, that he is not only a scoundrel himself, but destroys your faith even in the signs and symbols of honesty.
> But now when he had said this he gave the clerk a resolution to read, longer than the "Iliad," but more empty than the speeches that he is accustomed to deliver and the life that he has led.

How modern that long resolution looks; and those agreeable little personalities, mild for Athenian rhetoricians and friends of the people, are modern enough, too, and remind us that THERSITES was of an undying school of critics and "chuckers of odium."

THE PEERLESS ARABIAN.

In an age when military campaigns could not be carried on without the automobile and the motor truck and battles could not be won without the "tank," not to speak of squadrons of the air, the cavalry arm does not seem to be an important factor. Perhaps that is why the recent endurance test in New England for horses under cavalry conditions, arranged by the Remount Service of the army and the Bureau of Animal Industry, did not attract much attention. It must be considered, however, that cavalry were used for pursuit on several occasions in France after the enemy's line was broken, a fact emphasized by Field Marshal HAIG in his reports. The British Commander in Chief, like many of his Generals who distinguished themselves in the war, was a cavalryman. The day of the mounted soldier in war has not passed. In some kinds of campaigning there will always be a demand for cavalry, so far as one can see into the future. In our own part of the world cavalry would play a leading part in an invasion of Mexico, if differences with its Government could not be settled by negotiation. And in little wars of the future, especially in wild and trackless terrain—if such wars cannot be avoided—cavalry in some force will have to be employed. Therefore, the competitive ride between Fort Ethan Allen in Vermont and Camp Devens in Massachusetts was warranted in the interests of preparedness.

Among the twenty horses originally entered were four Morgans, four Arabs, one American thoroughbred. The other animals do not seem to have been notable for breeding, and probably came under the head of good riding horses with a local reputation for speed and stamina. The distance to be traveled was 300 miles in five days and a minimum weight of 200 pounds was to be carried. Condition at the finish and food consumed on the way were to be considered by the judges in awarding three prizes: The first, offered by the Arab Club of America, $1,000 in cash and a challenege cup; the second $500, and the third $250. Horses of Arab blood won all the prizes. The Morgan breed, in high favor in New England, particularly in Vermont, where almost every thrifty farmer boasts a "Morgan" roadster, did not distinguish itself in the competition. Ramela, an Arabian mare, was ridden 304 miles in 51 hours 26½ minutes, and she consumed 21 pounds of oats and 44 pounds of hay on the road. Her condition was good at the finish, and her total score on a percentage basis was 92.9. Kingfisher, seven-eighths Arabian and one-eighth "thoroughbred," a gelding, took second honors with a score of 88.8, and Kheyra, like Ramela a mare and all Arabian, won the third prize, with a score of 72.4. Kingfisher seems to have been the freshest at the finish. The first and third horses were owned by W. R. BROWN, President of the Arab Club of America, and Kingfisher belonged to HENRY W. ORSER of Northfield, Vt.

It has always been contended that the Arabian can go further on light rations than any other horse, and this the competition seemed to prove. The result of the test was to have been expected, if blood tells. No student of the origin and evolution of the horse would have predicted superiority for the Morgan or for the American thoroughbred, so called. Both speed and endurance derive from the Arabian, although its lines are slight and graceful compared with the form of the Morgan, a very handsome animal at its best. The Morgan, a riding and a driving horse, is, like the American thoroughbred running horse, a descendant of the English thoroughbred, which owes its speed and endurance to its Arab blood. According to an eminent authority, MILTON YOUNG of Kentucky:

> About the beginning of the nineteenth century there came from the lines of breeding of the thoroughbred traceable to Flying Childers, (British,) Byerly Turk, and the Darley Arabian, Messenger, a gray, stoutly built horse, of wonderful power and stamina, with a slashing, open gait, fitted to found a race of trotters. He was foaled in 1780 and became the progenitor of the trotting families of America.

Justin Morgan, the ancestor of uncountable American trotting horses, was foaled thirteen years later. ARTHUR MAN has declared, speaking of the Morgans and the Clays, that "these breeds in anything like purity of blood have mostly disappeared," because of careless crossing. The American thoroughbred running horse or racer has been bred mainly from the British thoroughbred, which is a descendant, with more or less crossing with native stock, of the peerless Arabian. The British studbooks tell the story through three or four hundred years of the Turf, that revered British institution. There will be found the names of the original Arabians translated from the East. No wonder the winners of the five-day race from Fort Ethan Allen to Camp Devens proved to be fleeter and more enduring than less aristocratic animals entered for the test.

A MONEY MARKET SERMON.

This is not a time for discussing the world's money market on the principles of the books, for none of the writers of them ever imagined a condition of things in which co-operation between New York and London would not "correct the exchanges." Nothing but equalizing the interchange of goods and services can correct the exchanges permanently, and the temporary obscuration of the unbalanced state of the exchanges under present conditions costs more than it is worth even to so strong a country as England. Ordinarily profit is the motive of the money market, but profit is now as little entitled to first thought as the correction of the exchanges when the current of goods is all eastward and the world's free gold is immobilized in the Western market. On his arrival from Europe last Wednesday Mr. PAUL WARBURG gave the text for the sermon of today to the world's money masters, and even to the world's teachers of morality. The shortest summary of it is that the world faces bankruptcy and Bolshevism unless the United States stabilizes the tottering balance with all its resources. The conditions are too serious to be sensational or trivial about them, or to regard them as matters of profit and loss, or the clearing of international balances. Mr. WARBURG is not given to sensation, nor are those who are in accord with him, CECIL, PAISH, VANDERLIP, HOOVER among them, and speakers from abroad at the International Trade Conference at Atlantic City. The money market of the immediate future must be ruled by high policy, not by high finance, and instead of the money changers being driven from the temple they should speak from its steps, if not from its pulpit.

Mr. WARBURG considers it "our moral duty" to furnish goods Europe must have if its civilization is to be preserved, and the case demands that we should furnish them largely on credit. It is only an afterthought that the paths of duty and profit lie together, but we should hurry with our help if we are to be in time to save ourselves from the floods which threaten universal society in the only form known to us by living experience. The Senate ignores such considerations, as if the United States could be compartmented either economically or politically. The enemy is within our gates in both directions. A cargo of German dyes arrived on Friday, and it will be easier to pass an exclusive tariff than it has been to pass the Treaty. There are Bolsheviki within our conservative unions, but no tariff can be so high as to exclude doctrines of depravity and disaster. They can only be beaten here and elsewhere by an aggressive initiative by those who are as confident as the Bolsheviki that the truth is with them, and not less resolute in their propaganda. There can be no compromise between capitalism and socialism. The suggestion of a Christian socialism is an offense. Capitalism may be Christianized, but not socialized. Capitalism may be purified after it has defeated socialism, but after Bolshevism has prevailed it will be too late. When we were paltering with our notion of neutrality on the morals of letting Belgium be sacrificed to German domination we were planting the seeds of which now we see the fruit. Once more there is need of some one to cry, like JOSEPH H. CHOATE, "For God's sake, hurry up!"

This preachment is not so far from the money market as may seem. Dependent upon the Treaty is the German indemnity of a hundred billion marks or more. Distributed among the nations, it would strengthen the credit of all, would bind the world into an alliance for "peace with justice," and would prove the solvent of the deadlock which prevents the current of the world's unbalanced exchanges flowing in the only direction they can flow for the present. After that first step the next thing is for the world to deflate its ideas. There are those who think that after the nations have squandered a quarter of a million of millions in destruction the march of civilization through capitalism can proceed at its former rate. It can proceed at a faster rate, but not until after a rest cure. The dreams of plenty and comfort through Government resources must be dropped, for the world cannot pay the taxes. Governments may help with what wisdom they have, but neither England nor France nor the United States will build better houses for those who ought to have them by the million in several countries. Those things and others will come, but not from tax money. They will come from work, which will yield more comforts when the economic method prevails over the political. In moments of elevation labor and capital have said that they wished nothing from the war but peace and normal prosperity. After there is an end of Government tax extravagances there must be an end to excess profits and excess wages alike, and men and dollars alike must earn what they get and must get what they deserve.

Even this is not straying from the money market, for the excess profit, labor and capital lie at the root of the price demoralization which has passed beyond economic control. The idea beneath the restraint on speculation started by our Federal Reserve Bank, and followed by the Bank of England, which would have led the way if it had had the power, is that production needs every dollar which can be withdrawn from speculation. Those who wish to speculate cannot be prevented from doing so with their own funds, and those who help them should "carry" them from the profits of the business which has put the Exchange seats to their greatest known price. The flood of issues, many speculative, is scandalous on both sides the ocean. On this side it totals billions. London has lifted the ban on new issues, and last week more than $60,000,000 were put out, while England was borrowing a quarter billion here. Leaders of finance have been as lacking as Senators in appreciation of the gravity of the occasion and their duty in relation to it. It is not enough to raise interest rates, for speculators can outbid economic profits except on the scale which must stop if the world is to be fed and clothed. All the money bankers ought to make can be made by credit to production and export, and the banker who fails to give them preference falls into company with taxlayers, tax spenders, tax eaters, and Senators who talk and do nothing. The Senate dare not reject the Treaty. If the Senate had the courage of its partisan passion, it would have rejected the Treaty months ago and would now be taking its punishment. As it is, the world is suffering and its suffering must increase. Not even the wisest regulation of the money market can cope with the economic situation which the Senate is causing.

"THE POET IN ACTION."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since d'Annunzio and his irregulars seized Fiume, we have heard much of "the poet in action." Action, in the case of poets, seems to imply violence. As presented by Shakespeare, Macbeth was a poet of extraordinary gifts. If a powerful imagination and the ability to clothe one's thoughts and feelings in language of amazing vividness and beauty are the attributes of a poetic mind, Macbeth was one of the greatest poets that ever lived—albeit he lived only in the imagination of a fellow-bard. Hard pressed by his foes, death staring him in the face, but grimly determined at least to die with harness on his back, he is told of Lady Macbeth's death. Read his brief soliloquy on receiving this intelligence, the lines beginning "She should have died hereafter"—a passage as coolly reflective and as poignantly beautiful as the longer and more famous soliloquy of Hamlet uttered in circumstances far more conducive to cool reflection and the phrasing of poetic periods.

Yet this super-poet is at the same time a bloodthirsty tyrant, a terror to his foes and a traitor to his friends, winning his way to the throne and seeking to hold it by a series of the most atrocious crimes. No act is too base or brutal for him to perform with his own hand, if that of a hireling is unavailable.

So far as I recall, d'Annunzio the impassioned war orator, even d'Annunzio the daring aviator, was not commonly spoken of as a poet in action. It was only when he put himself at the head of a band of raiders and threatened to burn and slay that he was so described. He and Macbeth seemingly have more in common than the ability to express their imaginative thoughts and intense emotions in beautiful language. Each is a poet in action. One is justified in preferring poets in being, and in being only.

TRAINING OF THE A. E. F.

Work Not Done in Three Months, as Some Think.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reporting General Pershing's testimony as to army reorganization before the Military Affairs Committee this morning you quote Senator Kirby as saying "we made soldiers and officers in three months during the war. We whipped the trained army of Germany with them."

This is a very common misstatement of facts which are most instructive. The truth is that the average soldier who fought in France had six months' training here, two months overseas before entering the line, and one month in a quiet sector before going into battle, or nine months' training, instead of three, before he started to "whip" the Germans. Furthermore, the men had the advantage of being trained in divisions, i. e., in the units in which they went into battle. This is hardly feasible in peace times. Finally, it is universally admitted that they learned faster than they would have in peace times. This and more exact information about the training of the A. E. F. can be found in Colonel Ayres's "Statistical Summary of the War with Germany."

SALESMEN ON NAVY VESSELS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial article in today's issue, "The Drummer on the Dreadnought," reports the most sensible proposal thus far mentioned in naval circles. The First Lord of the Admiralty is right; there is merit in the plan, though the navy does not have to become a fleet of "ferryboats for traveling salesmen."

The British idea is sound because it recognizes the real reason any nation has a navy, viz., to protect that nation's commerce. The late Rear Admiral Alfred T. Mahan, U. S. N., who is just beginning to be appreciated in his own country as the one great authority on sea power, has a lot to say about commerce and industry in his study, "The Influence of Sea Power on History." He speaks of "the matter of peaceful commerce, upon which alone, it cannot be too often insisted, a thoroughly strong navy can be based."

Well, then, if the business of the merchant marine and the navy is so closely interdependent, why not seek to accentuate that relationship on every possible occasion? If more business men should go over seas in men-o'-war and more naval officers thus meet representatives of the industries paying taxes for the support of the navy—that done, we could expect greater co-operation between the navy and civilian life. Think of the wardroom discussions between American salesmen and trained men of the sea; each would get the other's viewpoint, coming finally to see that the navy is just as necessary for future industrial expansion as large scale production. It is just as necessary to guarantee safe transportation as to put the goods f. o. b. The two services, business and naval, are parts of one whole national prosperity.

DUTY OF A SOVEREIGN STATE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Unless our Senators at length confirm the treaty, though with their own explanations and reservations, they will place our country in an impossible position toward our allies and associates. For amendments amounting to disapproval and even rejection of the treaty would mean, first, disrespect to ourselves, for the President and his associates are our own representatives, and then disrespect to our allies.

The Senators claim, of course, their Constitutional right. True enough, but there is no case whatever in which it would be safe to ignore common sense. The makers of our Constitution could not foresee the present case, in which not two but twenty and odd nations were making the treaty. Can we decently ignore the judgment of France, Great Britain, Belgium, Italy, Serbia, and other nations? Certainly not. But, as a sovereign nation we are entitled to our own opinion. Yes, and reservations in question amply cover the point. Even sovereigns are amenable to the rules of decency. The situation is this: Either we accept the treaty or we reject it, thus disgracing ourselves before the world.

REPUBLICANS REBEL.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Obviously the "reservations" proposed by the Republican majority of the Foreign Relations Committee are "amendatory" in character and will lead to the rejection of the treaty with Germany, or its resubmission to the powers, including our recent foe. The purpose of these gentlemen is perfectly plain. They intend to kill the League and treaty. These petty politicians are thus committing the Republican Party to a policy of reaction, partisanship, and selfishness that is in violent contrast to the enlightened and loyal support that the Democratic Party is giving President Wilson in his effort to obtain peace, justice, liberty, and the prevention of war throughout the world.

BALLAD OF THE DISCARDED TOY.

"The registration figures for the entire city show that 50,936 fewer women took the trouble to register this year than last."

Send out the cry through the Five Boroughs all,
Where are they now who a short year ago
Rallied and "drove" at their colors' call—
Posted and picketed—ran to and fro,
Nor slacking nor weariness ever would show?
Wherever you met them, in street car or bus,
By their resolute look each one you might know.
Now where are the Fifty-thousand-plus?

They thronged to the polls and their brothers watched,
Indulgent were they—for a time could tell
How often themselves in these matters had botched!
Who knew what political change it meant
And [illegible] on this earth to dwell?
It was even hyperbolized: "If they voted for
If they did all for nothing—it might be as well!"
Now where are the Fifty-thousand-plus?

Are the pale girls tired of their last year's toy?
(Maiden or matron—little girls still!)
The coveted trinket that gave them such joy—
The long-felt need does it no more fill?
What do they now—with "time to kill"?
Is the toy grown old that they slight it thus?
Does a later one with its novelty thrill?
Now where are the Fifty-thousand-plus?

L'ENVOI.

Sisters, a tool sharp edged is that toy;
There are those in whose hands it is perilous;
If ye slack, they will use it but to destroy!
Now where are the Fifty-thousand-plus?

MANY QUESTIONS OF PUBLIC INTEREST DISCUSSED IN LETTERS TO THE TIMES

LIFE IN BOLSHEVIST RUSSIA

American Consul Saw Tragedies, But None of the Blessings Another Traveler Reports

By JOHN A. EMBRY,
Former American Consul at Omsk.

New York, Nov. 7, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There has just come to my notice a cable dispatch published in The Globe of Nov. 6 by Isaac Don Levine regarding the glories and beauties of the Bolshevist Government. Mr. Levine claims to have spent several months traveling around in the territory under the control of Messrs. Lenin and Trotsky.

The whole article is at shocking variance with the actual conditions obtaining in Bolshevist Russia as I have come to know them through my four years' residence, as a Consular officer, in Russia and Siberia, and also through my visits to the Bolshevist towns of Ufa and Bielebei in April of this year. In view of this fact I feel it incumbent upon me, as a good American citizen and as a friend of the suffering Russian people, publicly to declare it to be my personal opinion that Mr. Levine's article is maliciously false from beginning to end, and amounts to nothing more than Bolshevist propaganda.

Regardless of what Mr. Levine may or may not have seen in Bolshevist Russia the following is a plain statement of the conditions I found in the towns at the Siberian front which I visited this last Spring. I can solemnly swear before any court, earthly or divine, to the truth of what I am now going to say.

I arrived in Bielebei, Russia, on April 23, 1919, just seven days after the Bolsheviki had been compelled to evacuate the town. The journey was made in company with Walter Whiffen of The Associated Press and Paul R. Wright of The Chicago Daily News, who, when they return to America, will corroborate every word that I write here.

We were conducted to Bielebei by Judge Paul Blumenthal, who, under the Kerensky Government, had been the presiding Judge of the Bielebei District Appellate Court. Judge Blumenthal, for many years a student of law in America and a stanch Republican, had been forced to flee from Bielebei at the time when the Bolsheviki took the town. He was now returning to re-establish the courts there which the Bolsheviki had overturned. As this old Judge re-entered his home town he received an ovation which could not possibly have happened had his personal character and his political views not commanded universal respect. Old farmers, gray-bearded business men, street urchins, toothless old women, high school boys and girls, one and all whom he met as he passed along the street, cried to him this greeting: "Drastoutchi! Slava Boga vi preyekhil," which translated into English means, "Greetings! Thank God that you have arrived."

The Judge took us to the Court House, where he found three out of his six former colleagues still alive. These three Judges were Socialists, and had weathered Bolshevism by pretending to believe in its tenets. The story they told Judge Blumenthal of what his home town had experienced during the past six months under Bolshevist rule was so harassing that it was only with extreme difficulty that the Judge mastered his emotions and carefully translated to us his colleagues' narrative.

The Bolsheviki had entered Bielebei in December, 1918. They were a mob of about 1,500 armed men who looted the town as they entered. About 1,200 of the educated men and women of Bielebei fled for their lives upon the approach of this self-styled army. The first act of the Bolsheviki was to round up all the members of the local Zemstvo, or County Government, who had not made good their escape. Those who were captured were shot without any form of a trial. That night a monster meeting was held in the Town Hall. The jail was opened, and all the criminals attended, chiming in their voices with the other "tavaristchi." At this meeting the Bolshevist Commissars for the city were elected by the crowd through the process of voting viva voce. The head of the Bolshevist organization, the Commissar of the Executive Committee, was a Lett named Belt, a jailbird of notorious fame. This man Belt had the President of the local Zemstvo, who was ill at the time in the hospital, brought out to the public square in his invalid chair and Belt himself then shot him before his admiring followers. The three Judges mentioned by name so many friends of Judge Blumenthal who had been killed by the Bolsheviki that the old Judge was finally overcome with emotion. He broke down and wept like a child.

Upon leaving the Court House the Judge took us to have tea with a Mme. Kameshnikoff, a woman physician in the city, who had living with her her sister, the assistant principal in the Bielebei High School. These ladies told us that all the rooms in their house except one had been taken over by Bolshevist Commissars, and their home been made a bedlam. The Commissars were constantly drunk, and gambled all hours of the night for very high stakes. Mme. Kameshnikoff's sister told us what had happened to the Bielebei High School. The boys of the high school were made to work on the streets without pay in punishment for being "intelligentsia"; the girls of the high school were made to wash out the barracks and wash the dirty wearing apparel of the Bolshevist soldiers, for which labor they received only blows and curses. She also added in an undertone that the prettier girls suffered insults of a far worse nature.

These ladies told us that a short while before the Bolsheviki left Bielebei they murdered sixteen men and women in the public square and threw the bodies into the little river that ran a few yards back of their residence. Among these bodies, which were recovered later by the townspeople and given burial, was the body of a sixteen-year-old high-school girl from the city of Ufa. She was recognized by a relative, who sent word to her bereaved parents. Her parents came and took the body back to Ufa.

These things and many other stories no less shocking seemed to us incredible while we listened to them, but before the day was over all our doubts were completely dispelled by the terrible sight we saw and photographed in a wood about half a mile from the town.

Our attention was attracted to a crowd of people going to these woods, so we inquired of a boy passing by if he knew why the people were going there. He replied in awed tones that a large number of murdered people had just been discovered there. Taking our cameras with us, we quickly followed in the wake of the crowd, and in a few moments were standing with a large group of weeping townspeople gazing down upon a heap of mangled bodies, men and women, who lay half buried in the snow. Various persons in the crowd recognized and, weeping, called out by name to their murdered relatives whom they saw lying before them. There were about twenty bodies in all, which the melting snow had partly disclosed. The very topmost figure of this heap of dead was the tragic form of a young Russian girl, just blooming into womanhood. Her clothing was badly torn and in her left breast was a hideous gunshot wound. We noted with horror that the third finger of her left hand had been cut off at the second joint, no doubt for the ring which she had worn.

Swallowing at a lump in my throat and unwilling to annoy with questions the grieving men and women who were gazing upon this sorrowful spectacle, I addressed myself to a fifteen-year-old Russian boy and asked who had committed this atrocious crime. His reply was laconic but illuminating: "Bolsheviki dielo," ("Bolshevist work.") The statement of this boy was fully corroborated by a number of men and women of the town with whom I discussed this tragedy later in the day. Every one told the same story. The victims which we had seen lying in the woods were men and women who had been held in the Bielebei jail as hostages and had been murdered by the Bolsheviki the night they were compelled to evacuate the town upon the successful advance of Admiral Kolchak's army.

DEATH OF ANDREYEV.

Russian Author Was Planning Tour Here to Combat the Bolsheviki.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The death of Leonid Andreyev, Russia's foremost author and dramatist, has now been confirmed. The most gifted and most successful Russian writer died in dire need in Finland. Because he was an opponent of Bolshevism, all he earned from his writings was confiscated, and his works could not be published during the past two years.

Several weeks ago I received a letter and a cable from Leonid Andreyev asking me to arrange for a lecture tour in this country. He intended to bring his latest novel, a number of short stories, and several new plays. I made arrangements for the publication of his works and also for his visit to America, when suddenly the sad news came from Helsingfors announcing his death.

In his last letter to me the famous Russian writer said:

"The fundamental purpose of my trip to America is to combat the Bolsheviki, to tell the truth about them with all the power and conviction within me, and to awaken in America a feeling of friendship and sympathy for that portion of the Russian people which is heroically struggling for the regeneration of Russia. The struggle is hard and painful and the sympathy of the great American people would hasten the victory and would lessen the sufferings of those who are perishing every hour in dark, lewd, and bloody soviet Russia."

As Leonid Andreyev's friend and representative, I take the liberty of calling the attention of theatrical managers who may desire to produce any of Andreyev's plays or of publishers who may desire to publish any of his works to make arrangements for the payment of royalties to Mme. Leonid Andreyev.

FRIENDS OF BULGARIA.

Their Position Considered Difficult to Maintain.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Feinberg in a letter in the Sunday TIMES shows he is a good friend of Bulgaria. No American will begrudge him that privilege. But it is one thing to try to stand for Bulgaria when Bulgaria is right and another to try to prove that she is right where she is evidently wrong.

Mr. Feinberg dodges the real issue between Greece and Bulgaria. The issue is not the Treaty of Berlin, although we can prove that Bulgaria has violated that treaty, once in 1906 when she officially ordered massacres and the expulsion of the Bulgarian citizens of Greek blood, and permitted the destruction of Greek cities on the Bulgarian coast, and a second time when she annexed Eastern Rumelia in 1908. The issue is not the events of 1913, although again we can refer the friends of Bulgaria to the very words of Mr. Gheshoff, who in the Bulgarian Sobranje admitted the guilt of Bulgaria and declared that neither Serbia nor Greece was responsible for the second Balkan war.

The issue is the treaty of 1919, Thrace, and the conduct of Bulgaria from 1915 to 1918. Is the population of Thrace in the proportion of seven Greeks to one Bulgarian? Did the people of Thrace send in 1908 to the Turkish Parliament seven Greek Deputies and only one Bulgarian? Did Bulgaria officially agree in 1912 that Thrace should send seven Greek and only one Bulgarian Deputy to the Ottoman Chamber? If Mr. Feinberg can deny these facts and prove the vice versa, then, Bulgaria must have Thrace.

Does Mr. Feinberg know that the Bulgarian treaty, which he accuses of having done injustice to Bulgaria, has left Bulgaria altogether intact territorially, and that, although this treaty imposes upon Bulgaria the obligation of paying to the Allies a war indemnity of $500,000,000, the same treaty cancels Bulgaria's debt to Germany of $800,000,000? Does Mr. Feinberg consider that treaty unjust to Bulgaria which leaves Bulgaria with a net profit of $300,000,000, and with all the stolen property from Serbia, Greece and Bulgaria, remaining in the possession of the enriched Bulgarian peasants?

Finally, Mr. Feinberg may refer to the Allied commanders and the Interallied Commission and to representatives of the American Red Cross to learn of the inhuman conduct of the Bulgarian Army to the peaceful and helpless peoples of Eastern Macedonia and Thrace. Here the Balkan Allies would have been perfectly well justified in demanding for Bulgaria punishment similar to that meditated for the Turks. It is generally believed that the Turks are incapable of self-government, not because they have been cruel to themselves, but because they have been unable to rule the non-Turkish elements in the empire. Now, Bulgaria has not behaved any better than the Turks during her forty years of independent life; but we believe that the Bulgarian people, being nominally a Christian people, will be susceptible to the influences of civilization in the future. That hope prompts our Balkan allies not to demand the extermination of Bulgaria as a State. That, of course, would be cruel. But it is equally cruel to our injured and wronged Balkan allies to demand that Bulgaria go unpunished for her crimes.

TELEPHONE DELAYS.

Relation to Health as Pointed Out by Dr. Copeland.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent bulletin of the Department of Health of this city the telephone company was justly arraigned for the neglect in not providing adequate service, and it was pointed out with much earnestness and truth how the aggravating wait for a response from Central may produce serious if not fatal results in certain individuals, who, though not bedridden, suffer from life-menacing maladies.

Some ignorant person may scoff at the Commissioner's well-founded view or regard it as overdrawn. As a physician whose diploma is dated in 1862 and who has been in active practice for half a century, I fully indorse Commissioner Copeland's statement and I hope that he may exercise all the police power of the Health Department to compel the telephone company to improve its service, instead of its present method of having the manager to whom one complains of these constant aggravating delays reply, "I am glad you called my attention; it shall be attended to; let me know if it occurs again." And it happens again and again, as the manager well knows.

I happen to be one of those who have been seriously injured just as Dr. Copeland states. I am a physician in my eightieth year, suffering from a heart trouble due to the wear and tear of an exacting profession and much welfare work. I am forbidden to climb stairs and subject myself to nerve racking conditions, but I am permitted to enjoy intercourse with my friends and relatives directly by telephone. On many occasions I have (by the clock) been compelled to wait five minutes and longer, exhausting patience already sorely strained. To add a comic note to my plaint, I have sometimes fallen asleep during the long wait and dropped the receiver, nature's conservative power asserting itself. Often the operator, after a long wait and after having been given the number, calls a second time for the number, which during the long wait I had forgotten. On one occasion this occurred three times in one day. On another occasion, after waiting eight minutes by the clock, I called Forest Chambers, or rather its number in the telephone book. The connection given to me was wrong. Information told me to look up Forrest with a double "r." This call consumed twenty minutes. After a long wait the operator sometimes connects with the wrong number, forcing me to look up the number, which during a long delay I had forgotten.

Other examples may be mentioned. Your readers may furnish them from their own observations. I have noticed that my pulse was accelerated by these annoyances, so that I have been forced to refrain from using the telephone which has done so much to alleviate my invalidism and remove the monotony. I have known these annoyances to contribute to a prolongation of illness and even to death in some cases. Many of your readers may find their own experiences reproduced above. Let us encourage Commissioner Copeland to use his police power to compel the telephone company to give the people the service they are entitled to; for no other influence seems to be effective.

JUDGESHIPS FOR LIFE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The recent election in New York City, involving the high office of Judge of the Supreme Court, has focused public attention on the close connection between politics, politicians, and the bench at the time when Judges have to face re-election.

This country of ours is at present going through a critical period when even court injunctions are resented or belittled. There never was a time when it was more vital to the maintenance of our institutions that the courts be elevated to a plane above all possible suggestion of political influence and should represent to the public at large the fountain of justice and purity undefiled and unpurchasable at any price.

Why should not the Judges of all of our courts be elected for life, subject of course to removal under proper impeachment proceedings, which can always be brought when necessary? This life tenure seems to have worked successfully in the cases of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States—a tribunal whose wisdom, independence, and legal authority have never been questioned. A further example of the excellent working of such a plan is in the English courts, where the Judges are all appointed for life, on good behavior. They don't have to concern themselves about political bosses or as to whether the lawyers pleading before them may within a short time be Judges of cases that they, demoted to the bar, have to present.

THE TIMES says pessimistically: "In most of the States of the Union the courts have been put into politics, and we fear they will never be taken out of politics." A long step toward taking them out of politics and at the same time elevating the dignity of the bench would be to elect our Judges for life.

Americans Counted.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Oct. 29 Mr. L. S. M. Robinson states that "there is no official list" of the citizens of the United States who fought in the armies of Great Britain, Canada, and France.

A return to the Canadian Parliament shows that there were 7,378 Americans in the Canadian Army, which return includes many American-born who had lived in Canada for many years.

Applying the same proportion to the figures for Great Britain would reduce the 100,000 to 11,343.

IRELAND AND THE LEAGUE

Defeat of the Covenant the Most Serious Blow to Nationalist Aspirations

New York, Nov. 7, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The writer of this article is not an Irishman by birth or descent. He is, however, a Celt, and has always profoundly sympathized with the Celtic movement. In particular he has always sympathized with and supported the Irish struggle for home rule. His point of view will be best understood by the student of the "Irish Question," as it is called, if he says that his first great political interest was awakened by Mr. Gladstone's first home rule campaign, which thrilled his boyish mind and heart, and that he was for years a devoted friend and admirer of Michael Davitt and his Irish Land League. He has never wavered in his adherence to the principles thus early espoused.

Coming to this country many years ago, he soon decided to become an American citizen, and from the date on which he took his oath of citizenship he has endeavored to emancipate himself from all that would tend to divide his loyalty and link him to the land of his birth. One of the most distressing features of his life as an American citizen has been the consciousness which has been forced upon him that a very large number of his fellow-citizens were influenced in their conduct as American citizens by a passionate resentment of Irish wrongs. He has observed with deep concern and regret that many citizens of Irish birth or descent have seemed to be dominated by hatred of England, frequently to the disadvantage and the injury of the United States. He understands the historical reasons for this, and makes no attempt to justify the English misrule in Ireland. Nevertheless, he does view the fact with extreme regret. At the present moment it is quite evident that a large number of American citizens of Irish birth or ancestry is opposed to the League of Nations, not on American grounds, properly so-called, but on account of hatred of England and a desire to use their power as American citizens to assist the Irish cause.

To all such persons the writer desires to submit the following proposition: Every believer in Irish independence ought to support the League of Nations, because without it the independence of Ireland is impossible and well-nigh unthinkable.

This is not the time or place to discuss at length the question whether or no Ireland should strive for complete independence and separation from England, or whether home rule within the British Empire would or would not be better. In the judgment of the writer, the latter is the only practicable solution of the problem. It seems to him self-evident that no British statesman and no British Parliament will ever be able to permit Ireland to exercise all the prerogatives and functions of sovereignty without limitation. It is hardly conceivable that either in the near future or in a future more remote the people of Great Britain will permit an Irish Government to make treaties with other nations, permitting such nations to establish naval bases on the Irish coast, for example. No genuine, deeply-rooted Irish interest exists, in the judgment of the writer, which cannot be fully and adequately served by a comprehensive measure of home rule within the empire.

However that may be, even if we assume that the writer is wrong and that the only solution is complete independence and separation from Great Britain, the fact remains that in a world based on the old order, with alliances and counteralliances, the maintenance of such independence for any long period of time would be practically impossible. If the League of Nations is not brought into existence, the great nations of the world will immediately begin to range themselves in alliances and counter-alliances. In fact, this process has already begun as a precaution against the failure of the League of Nations plan. It is quite unthinkable that Great Britain with her widely diffused and important interests will remain isolated and without some sort of defensive alliance. As the world is constituted, then, war breaking out among civilized nations in any part of the world will be extremely likely to involve Great Britain. And because Britain is an island nation her main line of defense must be naval and the nation or nations desiring to attack her must do so by way of the sea. It follows, therefore, that any power or powers desiring to strike at the heart of England will desire to establish themselves on the Irish coast. The value of this coast as a point from which to attack England is self-evident. As soon, therefore, as war should break out between England and any other power or powers it would be her first concern to assure herself of immunity from attack from this quarter, and since it is self-evident that Ireland can never contain people enough or be rich and powerful enough to maintain the neutrality of her coast inviolate against possible combinations of powers, ordinary prudence would require England to establish herself there. On the other hand, to seize the Irish coast, or important strategic points on it, would be the first concern of the power or powers ranged against England.

Now what do these considerations involve? To the present writer it seems to be perfectly clear that they involve the following: First, that an independent Ireland enjoying full sovereignty, in order to uphold that sovereignty and to maintain its neutrality against possible attack, must establish a very elaborate system of national defense. The nature and extent of the coastline to be defended, and the extreme costliness of modern coastal defenses, lead directly to the conclusion that it would be necessary for Ireland to maintain, as a permanent condition of her life as an independent nation, in the absence of a League of Nations, a conscriptive military service which would take the best years of the life of practically every male citizen. It would also be necessary to impose upon her citizens such a burden of taxation as no nation has borne in modern times. When we reflect upon the great cost to Belgium of maintaining a very much more limited defensive system, much less expensive in its nature, and the utter uselessness of it to withstand determined attack by a greater and richer power, it becomes almost self-evident that the taxation thus made necessary would be enormous and practically unbearable. Second, it is quite clear that by reason of her geographical relation to England and England's relation to the rest of the civilized world, Ireland as an independent nation must become one of the main objectives in any great war in which England shall be engaged. Third, unless there is a League of Nations which will undertake to uphold the sovereignty of Ireland, make difficult if not impossible such a war as we are discussing, and assume the burden of putting down aggressors, Ireland must inevitably become a cockpit for fighting nations and lose her independence in a struggle not of her own making or seeking.

For these reasons, then, the writer presents to his fellow-citizens whose Irish sympathies have led them to oppose the ratification of the League of Nations covenant the thought that for Ireland's sake, if not for America's, or for humanity's, they should cease their opposition. Nothing is more certain, the writer believes, than that the defeat of the League of Nations covenant would be the greatest disaster to the Irish cause imaginable.

A CELT.

FARMERS' VIEWS ON LABOR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Fifteen years ago I gave up city life, bought a large farm in New Jersey, farmed commercially, and identified myself with the farmer community. I became Justice of the Peace, took an active part in politics, and became intimately associated with hundreds of farmers in various movements, and have again and again heard them discuss the labor question.

They have no use for six-hour days, walking delegates, strikes, or (dis)organized labor. They rise earlier and work longer hours than any part of our community and for less return, yet they are at this moment the happiest, most contented, most sober, and orderly part of our population.

There are two fundamental reasons for this:

First, they are mostly American born, and even the few foreigners among them fall in line and are American at heart, adopt our citizenship, and uphold the ideals of our forefathers—law, order, sobriety, and thrift; and, second, each and every man stands squarely on his own feet, a thinking, reasonable individual, who takes orders from no union boss, delegate, or organization, but acts according to his own judgment.

RICHES OF INDIAN LANDS

Red Bank, N. J., Nov. 3, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"Five thousand in mad rush for mineral riches in the Southwest. Government opens 18,000 acres of land in Indian reservations to prospectors * * * hoping thereby vastly to increase the mineral wealth of the country. With a coal shortage threatening and the demand for oil greater, coal and oil experts are bemoaning the fact that they are not permitted to take coal and oil from the reservations. * * * The young braves of the latter tribe are friendly to the white man, but the older chieftains are reported to be 'sad.' * * * War by the Indians is not as much feared as war between rival white men. Not one white man leaving Holbrook for a reservation in the last few days has gone unarmed."

Same old tale! Indian lands, white man sees something of value upon the lands, white man wants it, white man gets up some "reasons," white man goes to Great White Father with "reasons," politicians listen to "reasons," fear loss of votes and of dividends if "reasons" are not heeded, Great White Father's Government gives permission to white man who wants land. But there are treaties and Indian rights! Never mind treaties and rights! White man Government has already broken a few hundred treaties made with the Indian and is used to it! Indian rights cannot stand when the rights of something else are stated. Now old Indian is "sad," but white man fears no war from Indian, but does fear war from his rival white men. White man carries a gun; white man Government forbids Indian to carry gun! (Does Indian fear war from white man? Paper does not say anything about that!) And the war for weaker peoples has just been fought! Same old story! Same old "reasons"! Indian knows it! Some of his sayings run this way: "As long as there are Indian lands the white man will be hungry." "The white man's promise is shorter than his arm." "The white man sends his brother to hell, the Indian takes his dog to heaven."

The Indian helped in the great war. It was for the rights of the weak. The Indian died for the cause. Never mind if his fathers were despoiled by the white man! Never mind if the Indian's ancestors were slain by the ancestors of the white man with whom and for whom he is fighting and dying! Never mind if he is fighting against the appalling spirit that disregards treaties with a race that has broken many and many treaties made with the weak Indian! Never mind if the spoken promise of the old Indian was stronger than the written, heavily sealed treaty of the white man! Never mind if, when he comes back to the reservation, he finds his land thrown open to the white man! Never mind if today he recalls that "the white man's promise is shorter than his arm"!

Never mind, old chieftain, blasted and pitiful remnant of a race that was as noble and as lovable as any race, you are "sad"! You yourself have seen this thing before. Your fathers died for their homes, their lands, their rights, and you were told what they saw and suffered! You were told what their fathers had seen and suffered. Today you see what your children see and suffer. You, too, are told that there are good "reasons," and that the Great White Father says it is "all right." Yes, the story is old and you know it.

"Reasons"? Yes, indeed! There always were "reasons" when the white man became hungry for Indian land! There always were "reasons" when the white man broke his promises (treaties) with the Indian. The white man is never at a loss for a "reason" when he sees mineral riches and crops on Indian land. The "reasons" were always as valid and as urgent as are the "reasons" for this latest invasion—"coal shortage," (who will mine the coal?) and "demand for oil," (who will control it?) And there were always moans and patriotic tears of "experts."

So it was with the Nez Percé Indian, the Ponca, the Flathead, the Seminole, the Apache of 1914. So it was through all the years and with all the tribes of Indians. So today the "reasons" hold good! So today the Indian is "sad"! So today the white man who writes for the papers avers that the "young braves * * * are friendly to the white man," as though the Indian were pleased with the invasion, when if the truth were known it might be that the young men would gladly take up arms and fight for their land and homes against the white man, (armed, why?) and with as much justice and perhaps more than when they fought at the command of the Great White Father against the Hun! But all he can do is to sit by and smile in "friendly way" when superior force is arrayed against him and when lies are spread broadcast against him to allay public conscience and to make white the infamous greed invasions of the white man.

SOUTH AMERICAN MAILS.

Abuses and Delays the Government is Urged to Correct.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Because your paper reaches a far larger number of business people than any other medium that is available for the purpose of this letter, I want to ask you to inform the business men and manufacturers of the United States that a large amount of American correspondence destined for Brazil and other South American countries has been delayed for about two months. This applies to letters dated from the latter end of July and the first half of August. It is generally believed that a large portion of this mail was on board the steamship West Indian, which broke down and went into Trinidad for repairs; another lot was on the steamship Vestris, which took fire and put into St. Lucia in the West Indies. The Vestris is now expected in Rio within the next few days, and most of the delayed mail may come to hand this week, but unless the circumstances become known endless troubles and complications will ensue.

While writing on this subject I might tell you that Post Office affairs between the United States of America and the United States of Brazil are in a most deplorable condition. Thousands of letters arrive here insufficiently stamped and are delayed in the Post Office subject to small but irritating fines. The Third Assistant Postmaster General wrote me from Washington stating that he saw no remedy for this—a very poor compliment to American intelligence, especially in view of the fact that in quite a few cities there are Postmasters who do not let these letters get by them, but who return them to the senders. Why cannot the Postmaster General instruct all Postmasters to follow this example? Another important matter is the careless way in which mail for Rio and points further south has been placed on board of Lloyd Brazilian boats that stop at every port on the way down and take from six to eight weeks to make the trip; also mail is placed on slow cargo boats when it would come much quicker if held for a passenger steamer.

American business men should invariably send second copies of all important mail. Parcel post affairs between the United States and Brazil are in a most deplorable condition. Brazilian officials throw all the blame on the United States Government because they have never signed a parcel post convention with the Brazilian Government. The facts are as follows: It is impossible to mail any kind of parcel from the United States to some of the most important cities in Brazil, e. g., Porte Alegre, Rio Grande do Sul, the most important point in Brazil in relation to agricultural products.

A prominent manufacturer in Massachusetts wrote me recently that he was sending me some important price lists registered; another letter followed stating that the Postmaster had advised him that the parcel could not be registered and had to be sent without. This matter is of vital importance to all Americans because thefts in the parcel post of Brazil are common. All parcel post packages from the United States have to pay additional postage before they are delivered in Brazil for that and other reasons thousands of American catalogues are never taken out of the Post Office.

From some days to several weeks elapse before the recipient is notified that a parcel has arrived from the United States. Then commences a battle royal that would drive the average citizen crazy if he was asked to go through the same performance in America. I mentioned above that thefts in the parcel post were very common in Brazil; but this also applies with equal or greater force to all customs entries in Brazil, where extractions are the rule and not the exception.

Only energetic action on the part of the American Government, with retaliation against coffee, if necessary, will ever bring about any change in these conditions, that are really a disgrace to civilization in this twentieth century of progress, and it is only necessary that they should be properly known and understood in the United States to the end that the Government will be compelled to take some action for the benefit of all concerned.

Chancellor Day on the Strike.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial article in this morning's TIMES entitled "The Strike at Syracuse" made very good reading. You may be interested in this paragraph from a letter which Dr. Abram W. Harris received yesterday from Chancellor Day:

"The sensational stories that you have probably seen in the New York papers of the riot up here are the most outrageous lies that have ever been sent out about this university. I say 'lies,' for that is what they are unqualifiedly. There was no riot, no fisticuffing between professors and students, no disrespect to the Chancellor, no two thousand men fined, no damaged property—not a dollar's worth. It was a trifling incident of a couple of hundred freshmen who were started out by inconsiderate and foolish seniors in one of the colleges, and the whole thing was quieted down in half an hour and the attempt to muster a procession to go downtown and rush the hotels and stores was nipped in the bud."

DOUGHBOY AND POILU

France's Serious Fault of Failing to be Like America

New Haven, Nov. 4, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Comparisons are as odious as ever, and since the war prejudices have grown more so. Discrediting and belittling the French is a game too widely played. That is the particular prejudice that has caused me to dig up my war diary and patch together these notes from it.

I belong to one of the "lost legions" of the A. E. F., to a branch of the service that came first into contact with the French and remained in closer fellowship with them than was vouchsafed to others. Comparatively few people know of the "S. S. U." because our duty lay with French divisions, our wounds were usually cared for by French doctors, and our medals of valor followed French citations. The S. S. U. service—"Sections Sanitaires des Etats-Unis"—comprised those ambulance drivers drawn from the colleges of the country in May and June of 1917, trained at Allentown, Penn., and sent to France to serve where the need was most pressing. The majority of these sections, of thirty-five men each, were attached to French divisions, and acted under French regulations. My own outfit worked twelve months with the army in horizon blue. Kipling's verse exactly expresses the nature of our intimacy:

> I have eaten your bread and salt,
> I have drunk your water and wine,
> The deaths ye died I have watched beside
> And the lives that ye led were mine.

Naturally a stretcher-bearer became to us a "brancardier," a wounded man a "blessé," and our doughboy was the "poilu."

Because of his unusual opportunity to become acquainted with the French soldier, the S. S. U. man feels that he has a word to say against the too often heard disparagement of this erstwhile friend of his—a disparagement based upon utter misunderstanding.

This same poilu is one of the greatest fighters in the world because one of the most "spirituel"—imaginative. He is not only pure nerve; he is courage plus. The quality that makes him the world's best lover is the same quality that turns him to battle-steel when the occasion calls. He does not affect a stoicism that is natural to the Britisher. He fights with abandon, joyously, and when he dies he simply drifts into oblivion in a sort of exultation that differs only in degree, not in nature, from his battle fury.

We, with many others, were deceived by our first impressions. Often the poilu does not look the warrior. In his old, faded blue uniform, his nondescript leggins, and his clumsy shoes he stands by his big brother from the West, little and humble, quietly watching. But when he begins to fight the revelation comes. And God help the foe in his path when the poilu goes over the top!

His courtesy is not a matter of habit, it is an instinct. Nothing ever makes him forget to do the beautiful thing. No matter how shell torn he may be, he cannot be driven from the zone of death until he has shaken hands with "mon Lieutenant" and wished all about him "bonne chance." This practice frequently made us extremely uncomfortable at critical moments, until we came to realize that we were watching something bigger than battles. From that moment we never tried to hasten the leavetakings of this little blue doughboy whose courtesy is beyond the fear of death.

Yet in spite of all this a large part of the A. E. F., taken rank and file, disliked the poilu. Why? For many little reasons that simmer down to two.

First, the doughboy knew the Frenchman only as a soldier—and, startling as it may seem, nobody loves a soldier, least of all soldiers themselves. This must remain fundamentally true until humanity loses adoration for itself and seeks the strange gods that preside over the altars of murder and destruction. Toward the worship of these gods the military tradition tends, but always falls short of consummation. Germany set the furthest mark, and Germany sees her proudest gains turned to dust an ashes. Can you imagine the perfect soldier, the ultimate creation of the logic of the drill books? He would be dehumanized, infallible, invincible, yet puerile—an ass par excellence; wholly admirable for his purpose. But lovable? Not on your life!

It is a cruel irony that the doughboy and the poilu, with the cause of civilization in common, lacked civilization's medium of exchange, a common language. In the bloody vortex of battle they fought side by side and needed no more explicit communion. But in the times of relaxation only the spoken word, freely exchanged, could have established understanding. "Combien" and "toot sweet" fall a bit short of eloquence when certain shades of feeling are to be expressed.

The opportunity that most of the A. E. F. lacked, the S. S. U. man possessed. Days on post that drew to a close in tumult and thunder, under the anodyne curtain of dark, and broke into reluctant, frightened dawn at the guns' red awakening; nights of fragrance and the cool white stars, nights hallowed by immemorial beauty, but here racked with the blood-choked moan of hemorrhage or the garbled prayer of delirium—through such days and nights we have watched with the poilus, talking of those three things—daily affairs, love, and religion. Is it any wonder we disagree with the judgment that sees only the soldier?

The second reason that the doughboy disliked the poilu is that the latter was un-American. For, to tell the truth, along with its adolescent strength and superb morale, the A. E. F. carried to France a goodly load of our unique provincialism. Call it exuberant self-reliance if the other sounds trite; at any rate, the quality that makes Americans so genially hunkerous was not lacking. Oppose this spirit to the elusive obstacles called "the exigencies of war," and the result is not far to seek. The A. E. F. had to overcome its own inertia, adapt itself to a new game in a new land, and do so in a hurry. An army of stoics or sapless dullards might have accomplished it without friction, if led by some inspired genius.

But the American soldier is no stoic, and he had no time to interpret the perspective of history, with a view to learning social usage in the crises of nations. So out of the confusion rose a vast disgruntlement that subsumed countless smaller irritations. The poilu was only one of the most conspicuous. Shopkeepers, railroad transportation—"40 hommes—8 chevaux"—the haphazard sanitation of the villages, all these came in for the doughboy's disapproval. I have even heard reflections cast upon the strength of French liquor and the beauty of French women by one apparently possessed of a sound palate and good eyes.

And how did the French people take this resentment of ours at finding France so shamefully un-American? As they take all foibles, including their own—with the sudden, sweet smile, and the faintest lift of the shoulders. For, mark you, France is wise. Matched against our three hundred years of North American existence stretch her many centuries, during which Western brawn and Eastern subtlety conspired to produce a faultless savoir vivre. Over that quick sympathy and mercurial spirit watches the loveliest head in the world.

I fancy that many Americans would be amazed to hear that to France the A. E. F. did not appear as a mighty warrior come to save a failing friend. The warrior's trappings were there, and all the lethal weapons, but borne by a big, lovable, boisterous boy whose face lacked battle scars, and who did not know his strength. He was ultimately to learn, and France stood his mentor, even while dependent upon him. His carelessness and rudeness she forgave, for she knew his heart was right.

WORK FOR THE TREATY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Of the constitution of the League of Nations Oscar Straus said in his recent Washington speech:

"It would seem in listening to the debates in the Senate that the opponents lose sight of the single and outstanding purpose of the covenant, and in striking their heads against single trees they fail to see the majestic and beautiful forest.

"The documentary landmarks of the march of civilization from the earliest times to our day are the covenant of Sinai, the Magna Charta, the Constitution of the United States, and the Covenant of the League of Nations."

It may only be by the passing of years and possibly by the lapse of centuries that a proper point of observation will be reached where in the perspective it will be possible to see whether this covenant will rank with the three other great covenants mentioned by Mr. Straus; but its future position in history may be largely determined within the next week in Washington.

"Will not the Senators be actuated by the prayers of the common people, who really fought this war, that it should be the last war?" Cannot the Senators see the handwriting on the wall?

No. They will not, and they cannot unless some outside force holds them to their duty to heed those prayers and open their eyes that they may see what is written. That force is dormant. You who read these lines must awaken to the sense of your own individual responsibility for deciding whether the Senators are to emasculate the treaty with the insulting and destructive reservations proposed by the Foreign Relations Committee or whether in the last analysis and under pressure from the country they shall adopt sane and constructive reservations. Put it up to the Senators that if they are for a League of Nations it must be a live League, not a dead one.

But probably you are already awake. Then arouse your neighbors, or your members if you are any factor in an organization; preach to your congregation if you are a preacher and have thus far maintained silence; if you are a man of power or a woman of great resourcefulness, manifest that power or talent in Washington. Others circulate petitions, forward resolutions—do anything, but do something and do it now.

For all the mails to Washington must be kept busy and the telegraph wires vibrant if the treaty is to go through with the United States in the League, head erect but undefiant, up in front, proud of its trust, proud of its associates and their common object—not sneaking around the backdoor with eye fixed on the fire escape, now timid, now threatening, ever grumbling, as it prepares to scuttle and run.

The League can and will be given a fair trial if the Foreign Relations Committee will substitute for these "dagger thrusts" reservations with the innocent but effective import that Congress shall not have its constitutional rights to declare war or peace in a given instance in any way restricted by membership in the League.

NOT A GERMAN INVENTION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your editorial columns of today's issue you devote some attention to the so-called "Leader Gear," which is an electrical system for guiding ships in fog or darkness by definite indications of the vessel's exact position, produced by electromagnetic waves.

The inference to be drawn from your interpretation of Sir Charles Parsons's discussion of this subject is that this system was invented, perfected, and first used by the Germans, and that England and America must yield precedence to the Teutonic genius in this particular instance.

This, however, is not the case. The original invention was made in 1903 by Dr. Robert Bowie Owens, an American, then Professor of Electrical Engineering at McGill University, and at the present time the head of the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia. Dr. Owens's invention was taken over by the Channel Navigation Improvement Company in 1910, and Dr. Alexander Chessin, formerly a professor in Johns Hopkins University, and the undersigned conducted protracted experiments with this system on the Hudson River near Edgewater, N. J., in the years 1911 and 1912. The practicability of the system was fully demonstrated and the device itself brought to the attention of the United States Navy and, later, to the British Admiralty. The marine branch of neither Government was sufficiently interested to encourage us in the further expenditure of time and money, but we continued in making improvements in the hope and expectation that a propitious time for its adoption would ultimately come.

You can judge of our astonishment, therefore, at the news that Germany had once more outdistanced us in the application of complex scientific phenomena to a practical, useful device.

PRINTING, PERFORATED MUSIC ROLL STYLE

By JOHN WALKER HARRINGTON.

LATEST of the schemes by which magazines are seeking to get themselves published without the help of compositors is that of The Survey, a sociological publication of this city, which is trying to meet the strike of two unions of the pressmen. This is the first magazine, so far as can be learned, to come before its readers by the so-called planographic process, which works with a perforated roll like a player piano.

As the machine which ushers the characters of the alphabet to their places is not much larger than the typewriter and looks not unlike those spindly legged counting contrivances one sees in banks, the inventor likes to refer to it as a parlor appliance.

The success which attended the Literary Digest in coming out by grace of typewriting and photography emboldened the editors of the Survey to try the planograph for the issue which bears date of yesterday. The first number of the Digest, although there has been improvement since, showed a certain unevenness in the lines on the right hand side of the columns—a ragged edge which one is not accustomed to see in the case of printed matter. The "justifying" of the line, as the compositors call the symmetrical arrangement of the words so as to make all the lines come out prim and even at the end, can be attained by skilled typists, but it is rather difficult. There is no going back and fitting in spaces, although in some machines there are adjustments being made which will enable the operator to split the spaces or even get quarter spaces.

But the planograph, it seems, can make even lines with a speed which seems amazing as compared with that attained even by expert typists.

The act of composing resembles more the sitting down to a piano and dallying with keys than it does the manipulations of the typewriting or linotype operator. The player places before him or her the copy and strikes the appropriate key. The key calls into action a small punch which cuts a hole in a roll of paper which is being fed through at a regular rate. Each hole by reason of its peculiar position in the paper indicates a letter which eventually it is to be the means of imprinting.

The characters on the keyboard are differently arranged from those on the keyboard of the ordinary typewriter, and the inventor says that they are more logically arranged for composition, and admit of greater rapidity in action.

All the perforations for the letters and spaces are of the same size, no matter whether eventually they are to appear as small letters, as capitals, or as figures. The holes which appear on a line represent the same character. The long line of even perforations at both edges are guide lines, which direct the passage of the roll through the machinery. The larger perforations, which are almost twice as large as the character perforations, indicate the end of a line. The distance down the roll from one large perforation to the next one indicates a line of type. The distances from the larger perforations vary as the number of characters of the same kind vary in each line.

As the operator approaches the end of his line, an alarm bell rings, such as that which is attached to typewriter and to some linotype machines. The planograph has an automatic method of evening or justifying the line. A counting machine attachment tells him when he has too many letters and spaces for his line or not enough. A thin paper tape which runs along with the roll records the plus and minus signs for each line, by punching guide holes, which serve as a notice that something has to be done about this arrangement, if the line is to look well.

All the copy has been set. The operator then takes his wide strip with the perforations in it, which looks very much like a pianola record, and likewise the thin tape with the guide holes, and puts them both in another machine which is called the printing machine, and is part of the same contrivance. Indeed the two machines can be Siamesed by having roll and tape run from the first to the second. A motor is started and the printing machine feeds through roll and tape. The perforations of the wider strip control a type wheel on the rims of which are eight different kinds of type which are thus automatically selected and the narrower strip or tape controls the spacing, and translates the signals for altering the spacing into quick action. This latter is an adjusting process resembling that of some machine looms.

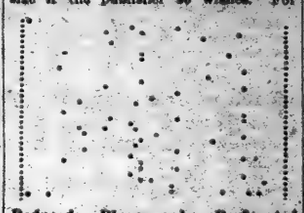
If we can think of this narrow paper strip as talking it would be saying something like this:

"Listen, the operator put too many letters in this line we have come to. No; he put too few in. You can feel whether the punches are right or left, can't you? What's the use of my telling you about all this plus and minus. Just fix it up so that the line will come out all right."

The correction is made automatically, for if the line has run over two or three letters or spaces the printing machine shortens spaces between words to make up for it. If the line is a little too scant the spaces between the words are lengthened with the same machinelike precision.

All this time the type wheel is revolving swiftly, after the manner of the printing wheel of a stock ticker.

The record of a player-piano translates into sounds the holes on the roll. The record of the planograph is rendering into letters and words the perforations which it bears. The impressions from the type disc are clear and distinct and they are printed not with the faces which one finds on the ordinary typewriter, but in Roman capitals or lower case, or in italics, as the guide may designate. This is real type, which is imprinted on smooth proof paper. The columns can be the actual size of those of the publication or they can be larger and then reduced. Thus if a 12-point type is used on the wheels it can be reduced in the final photographic process to 8 or 10 point, or can be increased in size if the publisher so wishes. For that matter it can be cut down by making new plates to the fine agate or diamond used in printing volumes for the pocket, and a big type and a little type edition can both be printed from the same slips. The corrections can be made by cutting out the portions where the mistakes occur and resetting such lines as are necessary, just as is done with the linotype.



Reduced Planograph Perforated Record from Which was Printed the First Line of The Survey's Article on the Steel Strike. The Initial was Pasted In. The Line Reads "The Steel Strike Brings to Light New Developments."

The inventor, W. H. Long, declares that this printing machine will run 50 per cent. more rapidly than the speediest typewriter. I saw much about the operation of the contrivance to substantiate his statement. Just as long as the motor was running, the tapes were ground through at the same rate and perfect copy was being produced until the ends of roll and tape were reached. The keys of the composing machine apparently cannot be made to jam.

No claim is made that there is special economy in the composing, and the inventor talks of the time which is saved in what is technically known as "making ready" for printing. In all fine magazine printing, and in the making of illustrated supplements for newspapers, the photo-engraved plates of heavy metals must be carefully adjusted on the press, so that, through some imperfection or unevenness, the thick metal plates cut or emboss the paper at one corner and leave a blurred impression at some other point, these defects must be remedied by building up or cutting away from beneath, before perfect work can be turned out from the press. This "making ready" requires not only skill and fine judgment on the part of the pressmen, but it is often a time-killer. It may take from 5 to 15 hours and even longer, according to the size of the plates and their number.

The printing from the planograph is done with a variety of press known as the offset. The 23,000 copies of this week's Survey were printed in a lithographic establishment which is not involved in the lockout.

PYORRHOCIDE
POWDER
ANTISEPTIC
for Pyorrhea prevention

Pyorrhea starts with soft, bleeding gums

IF you do not take prompt measures to check pyorrhea's progress, the gum tissues waste and recede. The teeth loosen and eventually fall out. Bodily health is often seriously impaired.

PyorrhocidePowder is so widely prescribed by dentists because they know the urgent importance of correcting a pyorrhetic condition of the gums. They also know that Pyorrhocide Powder was compounded for this specific purpose and has conclusively demonstrated its effectiveness in clinics devoted exclusively to pyorrhea study and research.

Tartar is the principal cause of gum irritation and pyorrhea. Pyorrhocide Powder not only polishes the teeth but it removes the mucoid deposits which form tartar—and it removes them without destroying the enamel. Its remedial properties aid in repairing soft, bleeding, spongy, receding gums. And it keeps healthy gums firm and hard.

The economical dollar package contains six months' supply. At all druggists and dental supply houses.

CHORAL CONCERTS FOR HOLIDAYS

The Interchurch World Movement has secured Greenhut's old store, until recently U. S. Debarkation Hospital No. 2, at Sixth Avenue and Eighteenth Street, for rehearsals of "The Wayfarer," the spectacle which it will present at Madison Square Garden on and after Dec. 14. Alternating cast of 1,700 persons each will be drilled. Meanwhile, beginning Monday, under the supervision of Laurence H. Rich, all will be in historic period costumes, of which 3,000 are used in the eight scenes. There will be alternating choirs of 1,000 voices each, now rehearsing under Tali Esen Morgan. An orchestra of seventy-five will be conducted by Henry Hadley, and the leading singers will be Theo Karle, Helen Newitt and Bernard Ferguson.

When the Musical Art Society performs the first of its two concerts of the season in Carnegie Hall on the evening of Dec. 16, chief historical interest will be centred upon Palestrina's "Magnificat," a setting of the Virgin Mary's hymn of praise. Thirty-five such works are to be found in a single volume of Palestrina. The one which Dr. Frank Damrosch has chosen is for eight voices and is written in the "first tone" of the Gregorian scale. This "Magnificat" is composed for chorus throughout, the only exception being at the start, sung by tenor alone. The jubilant choral outburst of the "Gloria Patri" sweeps the work to a triumphant conclusion.

L. Camilleri, who, with the People's Liberty Chorus, will hold a Thanksgiving festival at the Hippodrome on Nov. 23, is an apostle of "patriotic development through music" in the largest city of the New World, as he was formerly at his old home in Athens. There he developed a people's chorus of 1,000 male voices, as well as another of schoolboys. Two of his most successful choral concerts in Greece were in celebration of the freedom of Crete, incidentally glorifying the Greek statesman, Venizelos, and also at the Olympic games.

Velie

Many new and interesting features.

Silent, velvety power—instant flexibility for every speed—these are the distinctive qualities of the new Velie motor. Its internally heated vaporizer assures perfect performance even on low-grade fuel.

Bijur starting and lighting, the choice of the exceptional car—brakes so responsive that a woman or girl can stop the car easily and instantly—long, resilient, underslung springs.

Whatever your preference you will find it in the Velie line, all of the five models refreshingly modern and strikingly attractive.

Demonstration on request.

MORTON W. SMITH CO. Inc. 19 West 44th St.

A year ago, immediately after the signing of the armistice, we announced to our friends that we did not believe it would be possible to build in 1919 all the Cadillac cars the world would want.

This prediction has been strikingly fulfilled. Our distributors have been unable to accept many of the orders offered them during the past several months.

Under these circumstances, we feel that we owe it to the public to give the facts concerning the present demand for the Cadillac.

We are convinced that this demand is based not upon current conditions, but upon a widespread and wonderful realization of Cadillac value—intensified by its remarkable record in the service of the American army in France.

We do not believe that the extraordinary eagerness to secure the Cadillac arises from the general shortage of motor cars.

On the contrary, we are convinced that it represents a natural, a normal, and a permanent market which is almost certain to increase as time goes by.

Therefore, it is our sincere conviction that the fullest capacities of the Cadillac plant will continue to be taxed all of next year and indefinitely thereafter.

In the light of these facts, those who wish to own this car—the Cadillac—and no other, any time next year, will almost inevitably be courting disappointment if they delay in placing their orders.

Not in our own behalf, but seriously and earnestly, because we wish to guard our friends against disappointment, we urge them to consult their Cadillac distributor and get from him the facts concerning his earliest ability to book and fill their order.

Surely, the pleasure and the satisfaction that arise from the ownership of a Cadillac are worthy of being safeguarded, even if they involve placing now, an order to be filled months hence.

TO SUBMERGE A VILLAGE

500 Residents of Gilboa, N. Y., Must Emigrate That New York City May Have Reservoir

TO the majority of up-State little towns New York City is a haven of enchantment and adventure. To a few of them, however, it takes on the guise of a monster who must constantly be fed and watered. Especially watered. Every once in so often new legislation is enacted to insure the water supply of the metropolis. And apparently every new act means that some little town must be uprooted in order that giant reservoirs may be built. A short time ago it was Ashokan that suffered. Today it is the quaint town of Gilboa, with its 500 inhabitants, in the valley of the Schoharie River.

To The Schoharie Republican the enforced exodus of the inhabitants of this little village is so important that two columns of the first page of the paper are devoted to it. Part of the account follows:

"New York City's engineers have said the water supply must be replenished, and this new supply must come from the old Schoharie River, famed in story and song, for it is the nearest and cheapest source available. Moreover, the metropolis will use the Schoharie watershed as its additional source of water supply; the courts of the state and the Conservation Commission have granted the necessary legal consent to the destruction of Gilboa village by granting to the city the authority to proceed.

"Schoharie County looks with disapproval and regret upon the alienation of the waters of its famous stream, for economic as well as sentimental reasons. Winding its way through the historic old valley the stream has been the irrigator of its farm lands from the memory of the first settler and has contributed immeasurably to the fertility of its soil. Sentiment, which weaves many romances along the river's course from the time the first Dutchman built his house on its banks in 1709 and the Red Man first paddled his canoe its length, speaks strongly against the river's diversion and practical elimination so far as the Schoharie Valley is concerned.

"And this is what the plan of New York City means, according to admissions of its engineers. Where once the pure waters from their source in the Catskills flowed leisurely to their union with the Mohawk, there will be only the surface waters of little tributaries gathered in little pools here and there, impotent to unite and take the place of the stream that was.

"Schoharie could perhaps forgive the taking of its river, but it finds it difficult to reconcile itself to the destruction of one of its most thriving though small communities which the pursuit of New York City's plans means. To use the waters of the Schoharie, a dam 150 feet wide and 165 feet high is to be built at the northern part of the village and the water of the Schoharie thus checked will go into a reservoir with a capacity of, 20,000,000,000 gallons of an area of 1,200 acres, to be constructed in the heart of Gilboa village and completely obliterating it. The village will be submerged by the waters that once went their way peaceably down the valley.

"Situated in the southern part of the county in the town of Gilboa, with the nearest railroad twenty miles away and only the stage coach as a connecting link with the outside world, residents of Gilboa have shown remarkable enterprise and have made their community the business and commercial centre of the entire southern part of the county. No less than ten stores, well stocked and prepared to meet demands that many stores in the county's larger towns are unable to meet supplied the trade of the surrounding territory. Modern advantages were enjoyed by the residents of this one-time hustling community. An excellent water system met the needs of the village in this respect, and furnished ample fire protection. Electricity lighted the homes and stores of the village, being generated by a company that utilizes the water power of the Schoharie. Far ahead, indeed, was this apparently isolated community of its sisters with more favorable location.

"Nor was Gilboa behind other villages in newspaper representation. The Gilboa Monitor, a weekly owned and edited by George L. Fuller, told of the week's events in the village and vicinity, and its readers were informed of county events in its columns. Mr. Fuller suspended publication of the paper several months ago when the city gave its word that he must move.

"But residents of Gilboa in this display of spirit and business enterprise were simply following the example set by their ancestors, who were men of energy and spirit. The reputation of their fathers was theirs to maintain.

"The naming of Gilboa town is traceable to the recognition of Gilboa village as the seat of extensive manufacturing and business. Blenheim and Broome, two towns of considerable size, were formerly together, but a petition to divide them and form another town was sent to the seventy-first Legislature, and a bill making the change was passed March 16, 1848. When the name for the new division was sought, Gilboa hastily sprang into every one's mind. Thus Gilboa township boasts the largest acreage of any town in the county."

HAIRCUT, CENT AND A HALF

The commodious white brick building on the seashore in north Yokohama looks very much like a big Government or business office. But it is not. It is Japan's largest bathhouse and has just been opened. There one can get a bath for a cent, a haircut for a cent and a half and two shaves for a nickel. At the opening, the directors also announced that tea would be served free and that all the latest newspapers and magazines might be perused in the reading room without charge.

ENGLISH EDITOR ON LABOR AND LEAGUE

Alfred G. Gardiner Says It Is a French Peace, but That the Treaty Must Be Signed

By MONTROSE J. MOSES.

ALFRED G. GARDINER, for a long time the outspoken editor of The London Daily News, is paying his first visit to America. He went to Paris, during the peace negotiations, expressly to confer with President Wilson. Several books of his, made up from leaders in The Daily News, have shown him to be an acute student of human nature. Both with pen and in conversation, he is a journalist of the telling phrase. He speaks of Bernard Shaw as "a hurricane on two legs"; he refers to a prominent owner of a London newspaper as "a man whom he has the privilege of not knowing"; he contrasts Lloyd George and Grey by saying that the former wins by the "swiftness and suppleness of the evolutions" and the latter by "his mere presence." He is against Toryism and the organs of Toryism; in the game of internationalism he wants to see all the cards on the table. When he writes of Kipling, he says that whereas Wordsworth was a voice that sang England free, Kipling's is the voice that sang England captive.

Enter Mr. Gardiner, therefore, from his first day in America, astounded by the rush of things, by the huge contrasts, by the quiet of St. Paul's and Trinity, suggestive of Sir Christopher Wren, alongside of the Equitable Building, and the swirl of humanity on the sidewalk.

"For the last year—since the armistice—we have let slip the ideals we were championing," he declared. "When I think of it I see no room for petty considerations. Europe is derelict, the world is tired and with little hope, the people are hungry. When the armistice was signed we had it in our power to cope with conditions, to redeem our pledges. It might have been different today had the statesmen worked hard enough, had they forgotten their national selfishness. The supreme task confronting us last November was to get the world back into a wholesome state, and America at the peace table pointed the way. You were disinterested, you were not seeking for territory, you did not enter the war for conquest.

"We all had a common purpose at first—to remove a common menace. You saw your isolation disappear; you saw that while you had no territorial interests, there was imposed on you territorial duties; you possessed no sense of interference with others. So we could have been cheered in November last by a serious consideration of an American peace, had the opportunity not slipped through the fingers of the politicians. What did we get instead? A peace which was French, or near what the French wanted.

"But it is wrong to grasp that as a starting point in the opposition of the League of Nations. People say that the League will guarantee an unjust peace. I do not take it that way. If we can't get the League of Nations, then all is up with civilization; there will be a new balance of power, a new and more disastrous arming of nations, the conquest of science over the spirit. We should ask ourselves, Are we to live by right of destructive issues, or are we to advance in the warmth of a constructive current?

"My God, when I think of all the human suffering in the world, the travail of the lesser peoples of the earth, the sacrifice of human life, what is to be said for national prejudice? Have we time to wrangle with the blind over this fine point or that? There is the abstract truth which one must understand, whole, in his heart. This prodigious thing which confronts us, what has it to do with the differences between Democrat and Republican, between Liberal and Conservative? The world is on fire. Away with the Neros of our High Councils!

"When we reached the closing phase of the war and when messages were hurtling over our heads in England, between Washington and Berlin, it was like the dialogue of gods, and we waited. America, to us, was dictating the terms of a New World. Then came the armistice and the six months' blockade, before which our hope sank. There is no use now blaming this or that force for the utter unrest in the world. The resurgent current is bound to bring such social upheaval. But is it also to bring to us the flotsam and jetsam of the old régime which we thought this war had annihilated forever?

"Take, for instance, the friendship between England and America. If it is based on American interest and British interest, instead of on something broader and something more spiritual, it is no friendship at all and is bound to result in eventual conflict. Certain members of our British Parliament are willing to sacrifice the peace of the world for English interest; certain members of your Congress can only see American commercial interest; they would sacrifice nothing for the safety of the world. In the face of such paralyzing envelopment of evil forces how can we retrieve ourselves?

"Europe must get to work, work, work. If Europe is not working we can't lay the blame on labor. There is no use damning labor for the revulsion of the tide. In England what can we say to the worker if we allow the existence of the great fortunes made out of the war, made out of the human sweat of the worker and the blood of his son? It is up to our Parliament to confiscate this ill-gotten wealth. It is against the very idea of justice that men should become rich from the sacrifices of others. I have no doubt that you are faced with the same problem."

Before anything else, Mr. Gardiner says, the League must be seen to a successful launching.

"There are two things which cannot be reconciled," he suggested, "the spirit of locality and the spirit of the League. They are mutually destructive. Let every liberal sentiment redeem the League, making it triumphant, and in time we'll get the poison out of the Peace Treaty. I think one of the subtlest remarks regarding the latter I ever heard was that made by a Scandinavian journalist when he spoke of the treaty as guaranteeing 'peace with a vengeance.' It is to the League, therefore, that we look for protecting spiritual consents against the material tyrannies of the Peace Treaty. In England we have got to realize the need for the League, as Robert Cecil, Smuts, Grey, and Gilbert Murray realize it. The world has its choice of two paths, either the old abyss or a new order. We must have faith, otherwise we are lost. If only the better minds were in control, minds like that of President Wilson!

"The United States was the greatest beneficiary of the war. This was the result of the unavoidable operation of economic forces. For the two years you were out of the conflict the wealth of Europe poured over here. This accumulation is neither a vice nor is it is virtue, but a fact. When America came into the war she did not ratify our action from the day of declaration, but from the day the war began—August, 1914. Hence her liability began then. America must help Europe out now. This help cannot be offered by banks, because while private financial institutions can lend a few millions, it is only a nation that can underwrite a nation. Moreover, the need is for long-term credits, which are not consistent with American banking methods. The only great thing needed now is an act of faith. There are plenty of assets to cover the investment. Europe has 450,000,000 of people eager to work. She must have food, raw material. In return she will send you the manufactured article. American credit is a thing to use, not to hoard. It is you who must reinstate among the peoples of Europe prestige and confidence in themselves. How can we trust communities whose trust is bankrupt? How can we have an act of faith if we want more than spiritual guarantees?

"There is a workable model for this assistance in the way Great Britain has dealt with Poland. We don't lend outright to Poland, but what we say is: Here is a country with potentialities. Polish merchants are dealing with English merchants. The latter go to the home Government and report. Our Polish friends are solvent; we know these firms to be bona fide. All they need in order to supply us with what we want is underwriting. Will you underwrite them? There is not much risk here. It is a selective loan system. Some one has got to take the risk in the world today, and here the dangers are made evident at once. If, as I believe, the foundation stone of the future is economic, then let us get down to business. But we cannot get down to business until the League of Nations becomes a fact."

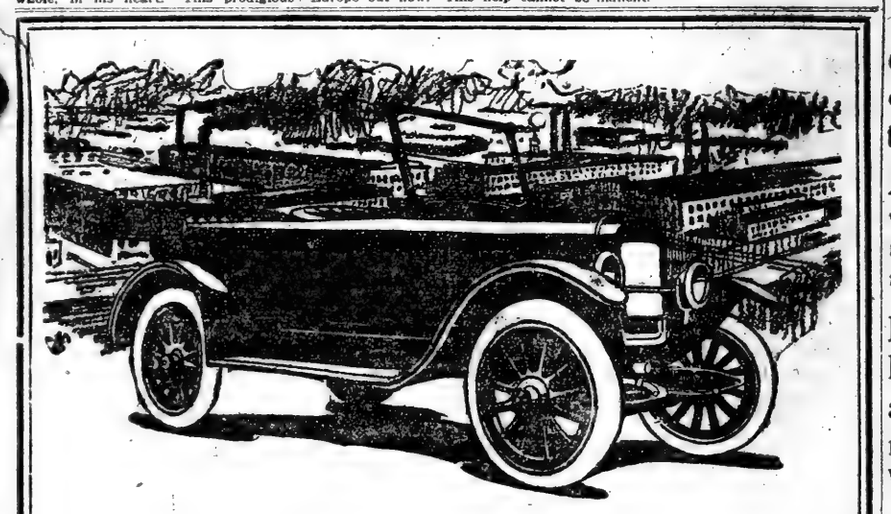
Mr. Gardiner, when he has been here a month, will be able to write on labor conditions as verified by observation in this country. At present he has only this to say:

"The forces at work here are naked; they seem to me to be primal and volcanic. You are up against something aboriginal. Capital and labor are stripped. The general attitude of labor in England is that it is an entity. But the American system is worked on different lines. The large, unorganized group, outside trades unionism, is alien. It is upon this mass that the I. W. W. exerts its influence. Do you not see what danger there is lurking in this elementary, uninstructed savagery of the unorganized mass?

"This condition appears to me to be the fault of those in control of labor in this country. They have created a fissure which should be closed. Mr. Gompers, it would seem, makes a deal on behalf of the aristocracy of labor with capital, and this at the expense of unorganized labor. Such a condition is industrial slavery. Democracy of this kind is akin to the serf system. In Great Britain the Labor Party works for the solidarity of labor. Trades union leaders represent the men. Do you realize what a menace the recent railroad strike was in England? Over here, of course, the country is so vast that strikes can have but a local menace. But at home we are the size of one of your smallest States. Our railroad strike was settled by compromise. A peace was reached without victory for either side—a peace based on a consideration of pure justice—as strikes should be settled."

In conclusion, Mr. Gardiner spoke briefly of the war controls which England put into practice and which were needed as much as ever after the armistice was settled.

"Many of our controls," he ventured to remark, "I hope to see made permanent. Others, of course, like the embargoes on imports, are already permanent."



An Opportunity---

But it's "First Come, First Served"

All year we've been besieged by the question "When can I get my car?" Hundreds of Briscoe buyers, knowing that there was no "just as good" waited patiently for delivery. Hundreds of others we had to turn away.

Now, by good luck, we have received a shipment of Briscoe cars that we can offer to the general public. There's a place for every one of them—but we've thought it fairer to give everybody a chance. So, while they last, it's your opportunity.

Why Stewarts Cost Less

TESTIMONIAL.

On March 22, 1918, we bought a 1-ton Stewart, and, after operating this truck a month, bought a 1½-ton Stewart.

These gave us such splendid satisfaction, we purchased a 2-ton Stewart April 21st, 1919, and Oct. 11th, 1919, another 2-ton truck, making four.

Our total repair bills to date amount to only $145.84. On the smaller trucks we get 12 miles to the gallon of gas and 10 miles on the larger trucks.

The first cost, operating cost and upkeep of Stewart Trucks is lower than the average because:

Hundreds of needless parts are eliminated, which lowers cost of production and reduces liability of roadside repairs.

Simplified design means less weight to move, a stronger and more powerful truck and less expense for gas, oil and tires.

Stewarts are giving daily service in over 500 American cities, on hundreds of farms and in 27 foreign countries.

Leaders of the World—

Eminent Statesmen, Renowned Authors, Famous Generals—Prepared the Speeches, Reports and Narratives Contained in the WAR VOLUMES of The New York Times.

NO single historian—or group of historians—could equal in completeness or accuracy this record of the Great War.

For it was written by the very men who formed the policies, planned the battles, and directed the activities of the great struggle.

In the army headquarters, Pershing, Haig, Foch, Joffre and other Generals wrote the reports that appear in the War Volumes.

In the council chambers and legislative halls, President Wilson, Lloyd George, and Clemenceau made the eloquent speeches and prepared the famous documents recorded in these books.

In the legations where diplomats planned in the great factories and quiet hospitals, in Parliaments, in Senates—wherever things were being done with all the inspiration of action—there the largest part of the War Volumes was created.

No wonder that the pages of these remarkable books throb with life! Into them have gone all the fighting fury, the indomitable will, the righteous wrath, the heroism, the sacrifice, the vivid romance and the glorious triumph that have made the Great War unequaled in all human annals.

PROFITEERS OF 2,000 YEARS AGO

In Rome They Grabbed Juicy Contracts and Sank Army Supply Ships to Collect Insurance

By GEORGIA W. LEFFINGWELL, Ph. D.

RECENT researches show that the ancient Roman of the second century B. C. was already troubled by such things as unscrupulous army contractors and graft in public contracts, while the Senate, afraid of antagonizing the powerful financiers, winked at their profiteering.

It was the period of the great struggle between the sturdy little Republic of Rome and the militarist autocracy of the great Empire of Carthage, which was attempting to extend her rule over the Sicilian straits. Carthage was a great mercantile nation. Her commercial preeminence and her prosperous colonies had made her rich and powerful, and the ruling minds of Carthage, relying on their huge navy and perfectly trained and equipped army, felt confident of their ability to impose on the whole world the doctrine of "might is right."

But the independent spirit of republican Rome—it was not till three centuries later that Rome itself became a great empire, greater even than that of Carthage had been—opposed them in a war which was more terrible than any the world had ever known because of the new methods of warfare and the unheard-of devices perfected by the greatest of Carthaginian scientists for use against the Romans. Finally, however, Carthage was defeated, and after the Second Punic War, as it was called, the victorious Romans imposed on their defeated enemy terms harsh enough to render impossible any renewal of the conflict. The payment of a large indemnity, the surrender of her navy and most of her military equipment, and other restrictions reduced Carthage from a powerful commercial nation to little more than a defenseless maritime town.

But while the brave Roman soldiers were fighting so valiantly for their country there were profiteers at home who took advantage of the national crisis to increase their already swollen fortunes. There were, for example, certain Government contracts for supplies to be sent to the Roman Expeditionary Force in Macedonia. In all contracts for army supplies the State covered by marine insurance any risk of loss to the contractor, and in order to collect this insurance the scheme was devised of loading a ship with a practically worthless cargo, deliberately sinking it in mid-sea after "rescuing" the crew, and then collecting a large sum from the Government for the loss of the valuable commodities alleged to be on board. This scheme of false shipwreck was successfully carried out more than once, but, although the Roman Senate was aware that the Government was being defrauded, no official action was taken against the perpetrators, as the Senate did not dare to risk antagonizing the powerful financiers of Rome in such a period of national crisis.

The Romans had to deal with graft and profiteering in other Government contracts as well as in those for military supplies. All public work was done by contract, and these contracts, which were under the control of the Senate, provided not only for the construction of public buildings but also for the restoration and repair of temples, of aqueducts and sewers, the paving of streets, and other matters of the kind. Companies were formed to handle the contracts, and the majority of people in the State were in some way interested, either as contractors themselves, as securities for the contractors, or as employes in the work.

Owing to the great influence of the contractors, therefore, the public contracts were generally awarded on extremely profitable terms. One year the newly elected reform candidate, Cato, attempted to oppose the moneyed interests in the State, and, as Livy, the greatest Roman historian, tells us, "bargained with the contractors for the performance of the public work at the lowest figure," but he was exceptional in his strictness. Even during his term of office, when some of the Government contractors found that an unprofitable contract had been awarded to them, they were powerful enough to have the Senate reopen the bidding.

Sometimes men of high rank in the army or men holding important Government offices were involved in questionable transactions. Contemporary records cite cases such as a victorious General induced by bribes to show leniency to the foe, or the Senate judiciously "persuaded" to support a questionable cause.

Bribery on a smaller scale often found its way into the elections. Although the laws against it were very severe, they were flagrantly disregarded, and there was frequent necessity for new enactments. A law against illegal canvassing existed at the very beginning of the second century B. C. Another was proposed in 181 B. C., and still another several years later, but it was easier to pass laws than to enforce them. A popular comedy of the time sarcastically remarks that shady electioneering practices are "time-honored and immune from the laws."

Most of the Romans, however, whether soldiers or civilians, could be depended on for public spirit and patriotism. This is shown in their answer to the appeal for ships. The powerful navy of the enemy far outnumbered that of Rome, and, as there was no money in the war-depleted Roman Treasury to defray the expenses of adequately increasing her naval strength, private associations undertook the construction of 200 warships "to be paid for when Rome should be victorious."

Practically every workingman and industrial in Rome belonged to a trade union. Most of these unions, or "collegia," as they were called, had already existed for many years, and in the second century B. C. even the professional cooks and caterers had their unions, the price for their services varying according to their skill. Combines among merchants to maintain a fixed price in restraint of trade were not uncommon, but the laws against such illegal coalitions were severe.

The Romans were accurate and precise in money matters. To quote a writer of the time: "No one will pay a cent before the day it is due, they are so particular about money and consider time so profitable." Each person kept his private accounts, which included such items as the amount on hand at the bank, the sums which had been loaned or borrowed, the money paid out for household expenses, etc. Very little ready money was kept in the house, as the Romans had a regular system of banking, depositing their money and drawing it out in varying amounts as it was needed.

The business methods of the bankers were similar in many respects to the modern, and careful records were kept of deposits, withdrawals, transfers, and interest due. It was not necessary for a depositor to draw out the actual cash and pay it over in order to discharge an obligation unless he wished, as he could give a "scriptum," which apparently corresponded to the modern check. A business device similar to our promissory note also existed.

The most important activity of the banker was lending money at interest. The financial responsibility of would-be borrowers was carefully examined, and the place of the modern mercantile agency with its credit lists was filled to some extent by individual initiative.

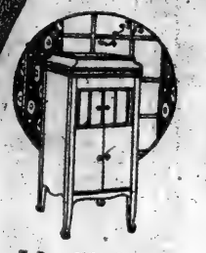
No Trouble at All to "Charge It" Here

No Need Living With Mother

Even though the old folks are tickled pink to have you and Jim living indefinitely at their home, they know as well as you do that the sooner you start housekeeping for yourselves the better off you'll be. The added responsibilities you will shoulder only make the venture more interesting. Nowadays a man can get away with the girl he wins in fine shape on a shoestring. No saving up for furniture, etc., necessary before or after the fatal day. It's Goldburg's pleasure and your privilege to select all you want and what you most desire, "charge it" and go merrily on your way. Positively no interest or club fee to pay. We specialize in starting young couples right; that's why ours are called "the Honeymoon Stores." Terms made to tide you over any reasonable period. Our unequalled Service is also effective after the Sale is made.



You'll Say "Columbia,"

of course, but just tell us the model and wood you prefer and we'll put one in your home with any records you want. Columbia courtesy makes our agency popular—we like to play the new ones for all comers and don't feel peeved when no sale is made. Better call to select your "machine" before the holiday rush limits the variety—Weekly payments accepted on cash prices, no interest, or club fee to pay extra. Small Payment Down.

Offer Five Carloads of Artistic, High Grade

Player-Pianos

With the Full Backing and Guarantee of Loeser's At a Price More Than $100 Under Their Worth

$498

On Your Own Terms

(In Reason)

$498

On Your Own Terms

(In Reason)

THIS ANNOUNCEMENT is among the most important that Loeser's has made in recent years. It could be made only by a House that has been doing one of the largest Piano businesses in the whole United States—by the House responsible, for the past several years, for the greatest Piano events in all the country.

FIVE FULL CARLOADS of Player-Pianos were bought to make possible this low price. That is as much as many an ordinary Piano factory makes in two months. It is more than most Piano houses are able to sell in a full year.

And it is because The Piano House of Brooklyn is capable of buying so large a number at one time and disposing of ALL within a short time that these instruments can be sold for $498. Please note that THIS PLAYER WAS NOT MADE TO SELL FOR $498. It is not to be compared with instruments anywhere in that grade. It is emphatically

Not a Player Manufactured Down to a Low Price But a Beautiful, Artistic Instrument Equal To Many Sold for as much as $650

In TONE, finish, design, workmanship—in wood, ivory, felt, strings, mechanism and MUSIC, these Players will compare favorably with ANY on the market priced up to $650.

They are absolutely and in every way worthy of being backed and guaranteed by Loeser's—and that backing and guarantee are not easy to attain.

They are absolutely and in every way worthy of a place among the Players of the Loeser line—and these are not merely "good" instruments, but the BEST IN THEIR CLASS.

They are, in a word, not "cheap" Players; not instruments made merely to meet a low price, but instruments or ART that are fit to be and ARE in thousands of the best homes of the country—available at a very low price solely because of a transaction that very few musical establishments in the country would be in a position to finance at one time.

A Player-piano That Cost You $200 More Could Not Give You Much More Than This:

It has a beautiful case of Colonial design, full 4 ft. 7 inches high, and of SIX TIMES VARNISHED selected mahogany.

It has a tone of a fullness and beauty that at once and alone would establish that this Player is, artistically, no cheap or unknown make.

It has every expression-device that far more expensive Players possess—and exclusive features and improvements that many of those do not have.

It has modulating levers for artistic expression, the tempo lever for variations of time, the sustaining device to "hold" any phrase, the means to accent, subdue or silence any note.

It has, in addition, a patented music-spool and the transposing device that permits you to change the key of any composition—to adjust it to meet the needs of any voice.

And, finally, it is soundly and well constructed—solid wood where it should be, strength where it counts, the best Player-mechanism that can be constructed—as fine a Player as can be built for far more.

It is an instrument that will ENDURE—that is built and fit to give a high measure of service and true pleasure in a home for many years.

Inside and outside, in every feature, this Player is one you may be proud to possess and it can be yours

ON TERMS THAT YOU NAME

You know the price of this Player—you know your own means best. You know best how much a truly fine Player is worth to you in pleasure and to have in your home—the social advantages it brings, the actual benefits its presence confers.

Determine on that basis what the payments should be—then present, unhesitatingly, YOUR plan to us. If your plan is in any way in reason, such a Player as you have long wished to have—a better one than you could ordinarily buy for any price less than $600—will NOW take the place of honor that it deserves in your home.

If You Can't Come Personally, Mail This Coupon.

How Spending $3 Ended Their Worry Over Money Matters

This Couple Had Never Saved a Cent—Now Putting Money in the Bank Every Week on Exactly the Same Salary as Before

AFTER ten years of trying to save, Elizabeth and I didn't have a nickel laid away to show for all the many pay days that had come and gone.

Then one day we found out what was wrong. Now we are saving over $15 a week, regularly as clockwork, on exactly the same salary that until recently was never enough. And yet we haven't become misers. We indulge in pleasures and amusements without that ol guilty feeling that we are spending money we can't afford.

One of the happiest days of our lives was when we made the deposit that brought our bank balance up over the $500 mark. To people who have never had any trouble in saving, $500 may seem nothing to brag about. But in our case, after ten years of being poor in spite of a fair salary, that small but steadily growing bank account of ours looks as big as a house.

And best of all, we know that our present bank balance is only a starting point. We know that we have at last found the way to provide for a home of our own and for a comfortable old age, instead of always trusting to Providence.

The Turning Point in Our Lives.

Our salvation came about through a little fatherly interest on the part of the President of the Company I am with.

One day he called me into his office. "Carey," he said, "we have decided that we need a Chicago branch. I am going to send Bates out there as manager. I have been thinking about giving you his job here—which means a bigger salary, of course. But instead, I have decided to give you some advice, and then wait and see what happens."

He paused a while, looking me straight in the eye; then point blank: "Carey, how much money have you saved?"

I didn't know just what he was driving at. Also I felt a bit cheap. But I owned up that my bank account was practically at zero.

"That's what I was afraid of," the president answered. "Maybe you think I am getting too personal. But here is where it affects me. I have noticed that the man who saves a little money as he goes along can always put a little more into his work than the fellow who is constantly worrying about his personal finances. If a man can't save, he is always in hot water. Sooner or later it is bound to hurt his work—bound to hold him back, and maybe stop his progress entirely.

"About the happiest day of our lives was when we made the deposit that brought our bank balances up over the $500 mark."

"Then again—if a man can't manage his own pocket, how can he be expected to manage bigger things in business? That job of Bates' involves management. You are the logical man for the place—except for that one thing you haven't made a success of managing your own affairs. Now, maybe I can help you. Suppose you tell me what seems to be keeping you poor?"

Making It Easy to Save.

It was plain that the president was sincerely anxious to be helpful. But I had to admit that I didn't know myself just what the answer was.

"Well," he said, "perhaps I can tell you. Saving money isn't half as hard as most people think it is. It is usually the amount of outgo and not the amount of income that makes the difference between poverty and independence.

"And it isn't the big expenses that keep people down to their last dollar, but the little items—the breaking of $5 and $10 bills. A quarter or a dollar by itself doesn't seem worth worrying about. But in the course of a year these small amounts all added together soon run up into big ones.

"The only practical way to get ahead is to have a definite system or schedule and stick to it. In business we call it the budget system. It is the only sound way.

"Now, I tell you what you do. I know of a first-class method for adjusting outgo to income, and for laying something aside each week. It is called the Ferrin Money Making Account System.

4 Years of Help for 75c a Year.

"If I were you," the president continued, "I would try this Ferrin system at once. It will cost you only $3 and is laid out to take care of all personal and household affairs for the next four years. That makes the cost only 75 cents a year. On your salary it ought to save at least $600 to $800 a year without any unnecessary cutting down. Then let me know how it works out, and we'll talk about that new job again."

"Well, I got the book. Elizabeth was delighted. Said she had no idea that money matters could be so simplified.

For the first time in our lives we have learned how to manage. The big chief was right when he said that saving is easy if you go about it in a systematic way.

Incidentally, when I showed my bank book to the chief a few weeks ago, I got my chance at Bates' old job—and my pay has taken a jump of $1,000 a year.

The Magic Budget Plan

The Ferrin Money Making Account System is simplifying money matters for thousands upon thousands of people all over the country—helping square up bills and debts—putting money in the bank for people who never before saved a cent. It will help you in the same way. This system, which is simplicity itself, comprises:

The Ferrin Money Making Account Book.

The Ferrin Kitchen Calendar (for the household.)

The Ferrin Pocket Account Book.

The Ferrin Investment and Insurance Register.

The Ferrin Household Inventory and Fire Insurance Record.

Compact information is given on Making a Budget Keeping Expense Accounts, Making Safe Investments Making an Inventory of Household Goods.

There is no red tape or complicated bookkeeping in this system—it is so simple that any one can keep it—so convenient that you will not notice the few moments of your time required to make entries. The Pocket Account Book (price when sold separately 50 cents) contains printed slips so that you have only to jot down the amounts of your daily expenditures. The Kitchen Calendar (price 50 cents) keeps track of household expenses. At the end of each week or month these amounts are transferred to the Money Making Account Book, which contains 112 pages, size 8½x10½ inches, and is bound in half blue Silk Cloth Back—Cadet Blue Cover, Paper Sides—Turned Edges, semi-flexible, stamped in gold on Front Cover. This book has been prepared by an expert to fit any salary from the smallest to the largest. Incorporated in it is a recapitulation for every month of the year, which shows at a glance the Budget and the amounts paid out during the month for the various classified items of expense. It is the only book to our knowledge which has a Budget column for every month. Special columns are provided for items on which an income tax does not have to be paid, so that these amounts may be deducted at the end of the year.

One Money Saving Feature

A war tax is now levied on almost every kind of article you buy. Few people know that the amounts so paid on daily purchases may properly be deducted from their income tax report. By keeping track of these war taxes on the pages for daily expenditures, and transferring the weekly or monthly totals to the Money Making Account Book, you will effect a saving on your income tax that will surprise you and that will pay the small price of the System many times over.

The Ferrin Investment Insurance Register is designed to keep an accurate record of your investments, insurance policies, etc. Contains 32 pages, size 5x8 inches, price separately, 50c. The Ferrin Inventory and Fire Insurance Record will enable you to make and keep a complete inventory of every room in the house; also provides for record of your fire insurance policy. It is an absolute necessity in case of fire. It may save you many thousand times the cost, which is 50c when sold separately.

FEW MINUTES A DAY

The Ferrin Money Making Account System takes only a few minutes a day. Any bright grammar school boy or girl can keep the accounts. This method is not a hard task.

Now you need not worry about the money you spent for clothes, food, rent or the theatre. You will spend it freely because you know how much you can afford to spend.

The Ferrin Money Making System is a most practical gift to any newly married couple. Many people use them for Christmas gifts.

SEND NO MONEY

See how the Ferrin Money Making Account System works, no matter how much or how little your income. We know what you will think of it when you see it. So we are willing to send you the complete system without your sending us any money in advance. Just mail the coupon, and back will come the system by return mail. If you feel that you can afford not to have it, simply send it back, and you will owe nothing.

But when you have seen what big returns the Ferrin System will pay you, you will surely want to keep this wonderful aid to money-making, especially as we are now making a special short-time offer of only $3 for the complete system.

You will appreciate what a remarkable offer this is when you consider that other expense account books are sold for $3 and cover a period of only two years. The Ferrin Money Making Account Book covers four years, and therefore has twice the value, $6. And in addition you get the Ferrin Kitchen Calendar, the Ferrin Pocket Account Book, the Ferrin Investment and Insurance Register, the Ferrin Household Inventory and Fire Insurance Record, each worth 50c, or $2. You have the opportunity, therefore, of securing $8 value for only $3.

But we can make this special combination offer only for a limited time. We expect to place this System in one hundred thousand homes this year. We want your home to be one of them. You are therefore urged to mail the coupon now—to do so costs nothing and does not obligate you in any way, and it may be a revelation to you of how much more you can get out of your income.

Gentlemen:

I received your account book a remarkable contribution to the people of this country at this time.

In our company we have 5,000 employees and it was a revelation to me to receive their advice in regard to the best way out of their income tax returns. In fact I had no idea of their intelligent ideas of their incomes and their living expenses.

The simplicity of your plan, which has emancipated from previous methods of personal bookkeeping, would seem to be well adapted to appeal to any community.

They say you can't teach an old dog new tricks, but I will say to you that I am going to use the Ferrin Book for my own personal expense, and somehow I will make room for me right from the start.

INDEPENDENT CORPORATION.

Gentlemen:

I can candidly say that all the record books which you have received are probably the suitable to the man who wished to handle his personal and household expenses. I have been myself, and I have been several of them, endeavoring to find something that would cover the ground in a more thorough and systematic way than they.

In further show my appreciation I would like to have three copies of your Investment and Insurance Register. I have been using one of the "Memory Books" for a number of years, but find it would be extremely useful to have a book of this kind. Please send these for the opening of the new year, if you will be kind enough to do so, and I will be very glad to remit.

INDEPENDENT CORPORATION.

Gentlemen:

It may be of interest to you to know that I have had bookkeeping experience for more than 30 years, and have always considered at least a dozen times that I could keep my own books. I've managed to do so, but more than two years I have known your Ferrin book to exist, but did not trouble to investigate it, as I supposed that it was similar to all the rest. Only by chance did I see one in the hands of a friend, and realized that it was exactly what I wanted.

There may be many others who are not keeping their accounts because as I was not, because they think your book is similar to all the rest.

MANDATES OR WAR?

World Peace Held to be Menaced Unless the United States Assumes Control of the Sultan's Former Dominions

By HENRY MORGENTHAU

Ex-Ambassador to Turkey

I AM one of those who believe that the United States should accept a mandate for Constantinople and the several provinces in Asia Minor which constitute what is left of the Ottoman Empire.

I am aware that this proposition is not popular with the American people. But it seems to me to be a matter in which we do not have much choice. Nations, like individuals, are constantly subject to forces which are stronger than their wills. The responsibilities which nations inherit, like the responsibilities to which individuals fall heir, are frequently not of their own choosing. The great European conflict in August, 1914, seemed to be a matter that did not immediately concern us. In two years we learned that it was very much our affair. The impelling forces of history drew us in, and led us to play a decisive part. If we could not keep out of this struggle, it is illogical to suppose that we can avoid its consequences.

One of the most serious of these consequences and the one that perhaps most threatens the peace of the world is a chaotic Turkey. Unless the United States accepts a Turkish mandate the world will again lose the opportunity of solving the problem that has endangered civilization for 500 years.

The United States has invested almost $40,000,000,000 in a war against militarism and for the establishment of right. We must invest three or four billions more in an attempt to place on a permanent foundation the nations to whose rescue we came. An essential part of this program is the expulsion of the Turk from Europe and the establishment as going concerns of the nations which have been so long subject to his tyranny. Unless we succeed in doing this we can look for another Balkan war in a brief period, perhaps five years.

Another Balkan war will mean another European war, another world war. It is for the United States to decide whether such a calamity shall visit the world at an early date. If we assume the mandate for Constantinople and the Ottoman Empire probably we can prevent it; if, as so many Americans insist, we reject this duty, we shall become responsible for another world conflagration.

Perhaps the most ominous phase of world politics today is that new voices are interceding in behalf of the Sultan and his distracted domain. The Government at Constantinople is making one last despairing attempt to save the bedraggled remnants of its empire. It has reorganized its Cabinet, putting to the fore men who are expected to impress Europe favorably; but it is not punishing the leaders who sold out to Germany and murdered not far from a million of its Christian subjects. The new Sultan has given interviews to the press, expressing his horror at the Armenian massacres, and promising that nothing like them shall ever occur again. More ominous than these outgivings is the fact that certain spokesmen in behalf of the Turk are making themselves heard in the allied countries. Again it is being said that what Turkey needs is not obliteration as a State, but reform.

Probably the financial interests which look upon Turkey as a field for concessions are largely responsible for this talk; the imperialistic tendencies of certain European countries are blamable to a certain extent, for, strange as it may seem, there are still many people in England, France, and Italy who urge that the Turk, bad as his instincts may be, is better than the Oriental peoples whom he holds in subjection.

If we listen to these arguments, and to the fair promises of the Turkish Government, we shall put ourselves into the position of a society which fails to protect itself against the habitual criminal. Every civilized society nowadays sees to it that constant offenders against decency and law are put where they can do no harm. Yet the Turk is the habitual criminal of history, the constant offender against the peace and dignity of the world, and if we permit him to remain in Europe, and to retain an uncontrolled sovereignty, it is easy to foresee the time when a regenerated Russia will again be dependent on him for a commercial outlet, so that the dangerous situation of the old world-order will be duplicated and perpetuated. We cannot hope sanely for peace unless America establishes at Constantinople a centre from which democratic principles shall radiate and illuminate that dark region of the world.

If we look at the Near Eastern situation we perceive that Italy and Greece are reaching out to such distances for territory and power that both, if their ambitions are gratified, will find themselves not only unable to govern the new lands they have acquired, but will be greatly weakened at home through expenditures in the maintenance of troops and Governments in their colonies. The danger is not only that the Balkans will be more Balkanised than ever, but that Russia, too, will be Balkanised. The only safety lies in setting up a beneficent influence through a strong Government in Constantinople, which would counteract the intrigues and contentions of embittered rivals.

A brief survey of the history of Turkey in Europe will suffice to make clear the danger of accepting in this late day any promises of reform from that quarter. I have always thought that the final word on Turkey was spoken by an American friend of mine who had spent a large part of his life in the East, and who, on a visit to Berlin, was asked by Herr von Gwinner, the President of the Deutsche Bank, to spend an evening with him to discuss the future of the Sultan's empire. When my friend came to keep this appointment he began this way:

"You have set aside this whole evening to discuss the Ottoman Empire. We do not need all that time. I can tell you the whole story in just four words: Turkey is not reformable!"

"You have summed up the whole situation perfectly," replied von Gwinner.

The reason why this conclusion was so accurate was that it was based, not upon theory, but upon experiment. The history of Turkey for nearly a hundred years has simply amounted to an attempt to reform her. Every attempt has ignominiously failed. Up to fifteen years ago Great Britain's policy in the Near East had as its controlling principle the necessity of maintaining the independence and integrity of the Ottoman Empire. The folly of this policy and the miseries which it has brought to Europe are so apparent that I propose to discuss the matter in some detail, particularly as it is only by studying this attitude of the past that we can approach the solution of the Turkish problem of the present.

From 1853 to 1856 Great Britain and France fought a terrible, devastating war, the one purpose of which was to maintain the independence of Turkey. At this time the British public had before them the Turkish problem in almost the same form as that which it manifests today. As now, the issue turned upon whether they should regard this question from the standpoint of civilization and decency, or from the standpoint of national advantage and political expediency.

The character of the Turk was the same in 1853 that it is now; he was just as incapable politically then as he is today; his attitude toward the Christian populations whom the accident of history had placed in his power was identically the same as it is now. These populations were merely "filthy infidels," hated by Allah, having no rights to their own lives or property, who would be permitted to live only as slaves of the mighty Mussulman, and who could be tortured and murdered at will. All European statesmen knew in 1853 that the ultimate disappearance of the Ottoman Empire was inevitable; all understood that it was only the support of certain European powers that permitted it to exist, even temporarily.

It was about this time that Czar Nicholas I. applied to Turkey the name "sick man of the East," which has ever since been accepted as an accurate description of its political and social status. The point which I wish to make here is that that phrase is just as appropriate today as it was then. The Turk had long since learned the great resource of Ottoman statesmanship—the adroit balancing of one European power against another as the one security of his own existence.

Yet, there was then a school of statesmanship, headed by Palmerston, which declared that the preservation of this decrepit power was the indispensable point in British foreign policy. These men were as realistic in their policies as Bismarck himself. Outwardly they expressed their faith in the Turk; they publicly pictured him as a charming and chivalrous gentleman; they declared that the stories of his brutality were fabrications; and they asserted that, once given an opportunity, the Turkish Empire would regain its splendor and become a headquarters of intelligence and toleration. Lord Palmerston simply outdid himself in his adulation of the Turk. He publicly denounced the Christian populations of Turkey; the stories of their sufferings he declared to be the most absurd nonsense; he warned the British public against being led astray by cheap sentimentality in dealing with the Turkish problem.

To what extent Palmerston and his associates believed their own statements is not clear; they were trained in a school of statesmanship which taught that it was well to believe what it was convenient to believe. The fact was, of course, that the British public was under no particular hallucinations about the Turk. But its mind was filled with a great obsession and a great fear. The thing that paralyzed its moral sense was the steady progress of Russia.

This power, starting as a landlocked nation, had gradually pushed her way to the Black Sea. There was something in her steady progress southward that seemed almost as inevitable as fate. That Russia was determined to obtain Constantinople and become heir to the Sultan's empire was the conviction that obsessed the British mind. Once this happened, the Palmerston school declared, the British Empire would come speedily to an end. It is almost impossible for us of this generation to conceive the extent to which this fear of Russia laid hold of the British mind. It dogged all the thoughts of British statesmen and British publicists. There appeared to be only one way of checking Russia and protecting the British fireside—that was to preserve the Turkish Empire. England believed that, as long as the Sultan ruled at Constantinople, the Russian could never occupy that capital and from it menace the British Empire.

Thus British enthusiasm for Turkey was merely an expression of hatred and fear of Russia. It was this fear that led British statesmen to disregard the humane principles involved and adopt the course that apparently presented the national advantage. The English attitude of 1853 presented in particularly acute form that question which has always troubled statesmen: Is there any such thing as principle in the conduct of a nation, or is a country justified in doing in adopting the course that best promotes its interests or which seems best to do so? As applied to Turkey it was this: Was it Great Britain's duty to protect the Christians against the murderous attacks of the Mohammedans, or should she shut her eyes to their sufferings so long as this course proved profitable politically?

I should be doing an injustice to England did I not point out that the British public has always been divided on this issue. One side has always insisted on regarding the Turkish problem as a matter simply of expediency, while another has insisted on solving it on the ground of justice and right. The part of humanity existed in the days of the Crimean war. Their leaders were Richard Cobden and John Bright—men who formed the vanguard in that group of British statesmen who insisted on regarding public questions from other than materialistic standpoints.

Cobden and Bright saw in the Ottoman question, as it presented itself in 1853, not chiefly a problem in the balance of power, but one that affected the lives of millions of human beings. It was not the threatened aggression of Russia that disturbed them; their eyes were fixed rather on the Christian populations that were being daily tortured under Turkish rule. They demanded a solution of the Eastern question in the way that would best promote the welfare of the Armenians, Greeks, Syrians, and Jews, whom the Sultan had maltreated for centuries. They cared little for the future of Constantinople; they cared much for the future of these persecuted peoples. They therefore took what was, I am sorry to say, the unpopular side in that day. They opposed the mad determination of the British public to go to war for the sake of maintaining the Turkish Empire.

The greatest speech John Bright ever made was against the Crimean war. "That terrible oppression, that multitudinous crime which we call the Ottoman Empire," was his description of the country which Palmerston so greatly admired. Richard Cobden had studied conditions at first hand and had reached a conclusion identically the same as that of my friend whom I have already quoted—that is, that Turkey was not reformable. He ridiculed the fear that everywhere prevailed against Russia, denied that Russia's prosperity as a nation necessarily endangered Great Britain, declared that the Turkish Empire could not be maintained, and that, even though it could be, it was not worth preserving.

"You must address yourselves," said Cobden, "as men of sense, and men of energy to the question—What are you to do with the Christian population? For Mohammedanism cannot be maintained, and I should be sorry to see this country fighting for the maintenance of Mohammedanism. * * * You may keep Turkey on the map of Europe, you may call the country by the name of Turkey if you like, but do not think that you can keep up the Mohammedan rule in the country."

These were about the mightiest voices in England at that time, but even Cobden and Bright were wildly abused for maintaining that the Eastern question was primarily a problem in ethics. In order to preserve this hideous anachronism England fought a bloody and disastrous war. I presume most Englishmen today regard the Crimean war as about the most wicked and futile in their national existence. When the whole thing was over, a witty Frenchman summed up the performance by saying: "If we read the treaty of peace, there are no visible signs to show who were the conquerors and who the vanquished." There was only one power which could view the results with much satisfaction; that was Turkey. The Treaty of Paris specifically guaranteed her independence and integrity. It shut the Black Sea to naval vessels, thus protecting Turkey from attack by Russia. Best of all, it left the Sultan's Christian subjects absolutely in his power.

The Sultan did, indeed, promise reforms—but he merely promised them. Despite experience to the contrary, the British and French diplomats blandly accepted this promise as equivalent to performance. It is painful to look back to this year 1856; to realize that France and England, having defeated Russia, had a free hand to solve the Ottoman problem, and that they refrained from doing so. That absurd prepossession that this Oriental empire must be preserved in Europe simply as a buffer State against the progress of Russia entirely controlled the minds of British statesmen—and millions of Christian peoples were left to their fate.

What that fate was we all know. The Sultan's promises of reform, never made in good faith, were immediately disregarded. Pillage, massacre, and lust continued to be the chief instruments used by the Sublime Porte in governing his subject peoples. Again the Sultan maintained his throne by playing off one European power against another. The "settlement" of the Eastern problem which had been provided by the Crimean war lasted until 1876.

These twenty years were not quiet ones in the Ottoman dominions; they were a time of constant misery and torture for the abandoned Christian populations. Great Britain and France learned precisely what the "integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire" meant in 1876, when stories of the Bulgarian massacres again reached Europe. Once more Europe faced this everlasting question of the Turk in precisely the same form as in 1856. Again the British people had to decide between expediency and principle in deciding the future of Turkey. Again the British public divided into two groups. Palmerston was dead, but his animosity to Russia and his fondness for the Turk had become the inheritance of Disraeli. With this statesman, as with his predecessor, Turkey was a nation that must be preserved, whatever might be the lot of her suffering Christians. The other part, that played by Cobden and Bright in 1856, was now played by Gladstone.

"The greatest triumph of our time," said Gladstone in 1870, "will be the enthronement of the idea of public right as the governing idea of European politics." And Gladstone now proposed to apply this lofty principle to this new Turkish crisis. Many of us remember the attitude of the Disraeli Government in those days. We are still proud of the part played by two Americans, McGahan, a newspaper correspondent, and Schuyler, the American Consul at Constantinople, in bringing the real facts to the attention of the civilized world.

Until these men published the results of their investigations the Disraeli Government fighting for the maintenance of Mohammedanism. * * * You may keep Turkey on the map of Europe, you may call the country by the name of Turkey if you like, but do not think that you can keep up the Mohammedan rule in the country."

watered by the two other springs. Here the first cucumbers are raised for the Jerusalem market, which is distant about eleven hours' journey by land. At the time of our visit there were only three men here waiting for the ripening of the millet, that they might get away from the great heat to the higher levels.

About ten miles south of Engedi is the peerless natural fortress of Masada, (Sebbeh,) first fortified by the Maccabees, then used as a place of refuge by Herod, and finally immortalized by the flight thither and stand made by the Sicarii, or Zealots—when the country was subjugated by Titus—in the vain hope of escaping enslavement by the Romans. Here, after desperately heroic but futile efforts of self-defense against the vastly superior forces and arms of their besiegers, the 960 survivors finally had recourse to that mad expedient, as Josephus vividly describes it, of putting their wives, children and themselves to death, rather than fall into the hands of their vanquishers.

At the foot of this detached portion of the tableland, two miles from the sea, can clearly be seen the Roman wall of circumvallation and the two Roman camps on either side of the small ravine "to prevent a single one escaping." The fortress, which is 1,700 feet above the sea, has steep sides at an angle of about 75 degrees, and cannot be approached except from a connecting neck, called the Serpentine, at the southwestern angle. It was at this point that the besiegers concentrated their forces.

An eight-mile journey along the coast from here, and Jehel Usdum comes into view. This is nothing less than a mountain of rock salt, six miles long, rising at one point to 500 feet. In this mountain is a large cave which was explored to the extent of about two hundred yards. It is dimly lighted up to this point by a natural shaft in the rock salt, which admits the sunlight from above. The shaft is 80 feet high and 20 feet in diameter. From the ceiling of this cave hang great snow-white stalactites, very bitter to the taste. The approach to this mountain presents most fantastic appearances of walls, buttresses, parapets.

Going northward, the magnificent gorge of the river Arnon was reached. This contains the finest natural scenery in Palestine. The sides of the canyon rise perpendicularly about 800 feet, and are only about 20 feet apart, here overhanging, there overlapping or dovetailing into one another, as though this mighty mass has been violently rent asunder to allow the seething stream of the Arnon, with its cascades and whirlpools, access to the sea.

About eight miles further north lie the hot baths of Callirhoe. Thither Herod went, when stricken with his last sickness, in the hope of finding recovery, and there the remains of his buildings can be seen. Several miles higher up lies the Castle of Machaerus, where John the Baptist was beheaded.

This is a volcanic region. From great clefts in the mountain sides, where one can distinctly hear the bubbling of the flowing hot waters, clouds of steam rise up.

To the majority, perhaps, the Dead Sea is associated with Sodom and Gomorrah. No one knows exactly where these cities stood. They have been variously placed. Popular tradition has always most conveniently pointed to the north shore, the place visited by tourists and pilgrims from Jerusalem, as the site. Canon Tristram, however, places the site on the east side. At Callirhoe, on this side, there are palpable evidences of volcanic upheaval, not to mention the combustible substances in sulphur, bitumen, and possibly oil, that might have played a part in the overthrow of these ancient cities.

Mount Nebo, from which Moses viewed the Promised Land, is about opposite the north end of the sea, on the tablelands, and Medaba, about ten miles inland, but a straight line.

Constantinople's Magnificent Harbor, With Warships Lying at Anchor.

ernment branded all the reports of Bulgarian atrocities as lies. "Coffee house babble" was the term applied by Disraeli to these reports, while Lord Salisbury, in a public address, lauded the personal character of the Sultan. But these two Americans showed that the Bulgarian reports were not idle gossip. They furnished Gladstone his material for his famous Bulgarian pamphlet, in which he propounded the only solution of the Turkish problem that should satisfy the conscience of the British people. His words, uttered in 1876, are just as timely now as they were then.

"Let the Turks now carry away their abuses in the only possible manner, namely, by carrying away themselves. Their Zaptiehs and their Mudirs, their Bimbashis and their Yugbashis, their Kaimakans and their Pashas, one and all, bag and baggage, shall, I hope, clear out from the province they have desolated and profaned."

Gladstone's denunciation stirred the British conscience to its depths. The finer side of the British character manifested itself; the public conscience had made great advances since 1856, and the masses of the British people began to see the Ottoman problem in its true light. Consequently, when Russia intervened in behalf of the Bulgarians and other persecuted peoples, England did not commit the fearful mistake of 1853—she did not go to war to prevent the intervention. British public opinion at first applauded the Russian armies; when, however, the Czar's forces approached Constantinople, the old dread of Crimean days seized the British public once more. Again Englishmen forget the miseries of the Christians and began to see the spectre of Russia seated at Constantinople. Again Great Britain began to prepare for war; the British fleet passed the Dardanelles and anchored off Constantinople. England again declared that the safety of her empire demanded the preservation of Turkey, and gave Russia the option of war or a congress at which the treaty she had made with Turkey should be revised.

Russia accepted the latter alternative, and the Congress of Berlin was the result. This Congress could have freed all the subject peoples and solved the Eastern question, but again civilized Europe threw away the opportunity. At this Congress England, in the person of Disraeli, became the Sultan's advocate, and again the Sultan came out victorious. Certain territories he lost, it is true, but Constantinople was left in his hands and a great area of the Balkans and the larger part of Asia Minor. As for the Armenians, the Syrians, the Greeks, and the Macedonians, the world once more accepted from Turkey promises of reform. Thus Gladstone and the most enlightened opinion in England lost their battle, and British authority again became the instrument for preserving that "terrible oppression, that multitudinous crime which we call the Ottoman Empire."

Had it not been for the Congress of Berlin it is possible that we should never have had the world war. The treaty let Austria into Bosnia and Herzegovina and so laid the basis for the ultimatum of July 22, 1914. It failed to settle the fate of Macedonia, and so made inevitable the Balkan wars. By leaving Turkey an independent sovereignty, with its capital on the Bosporus, it made possible the intrigues of Germany for a great Oriental empire. No wonder Gladstone denounced it as an "insane covenant" and "the most deplorable chapter in our foreign policy since the peace of 1815."

"The plenipotentiaries," he said, "have spoken in the terms of Metternich rather than those of Canning. * * * It was their part to take the side of liberty—as a matter of fact, they took the side of servitude."

The greatest sufferers, as always, were the Christian populations. The Sultan treated his promises of 1878 precisely as he had treated those of 1856. It was after this treaty, indeed, that Abdul Hamid adopted his systematic plan of solving the Armenian problem by massacring all the Armenians. The condition of the subject peoples became worse as years went on, until finally, in 1915, we had the most terrible persecutions in history.

The Russian terror, if it ever was a terror, has disappeared. England no longer fears a Russia stationed at Constantinople and threatening her Indian Empire. The once mighty giant now lies a hopelessly crippled invalid, utterly incapable of aggressive action against any nation. What her fate will be no one knows. What is certain, however, is that the old Czaristic empire, constantly bent on military aggression, has disappeared forever. When we look upon Russia today and then think of the terror which she inspired in the hearts of British statesmen forty and sixty-two years ago the contrast is almost pitiful and grotesque. The nation that succeeded Russia as an ambitious heir to the Sultan's dominions, Germany, is now almost as powerless.

Moreover, the British conscience has changed since the days of the Crimean and Russo-Turkish wars. The old-time attitude, which insisted on regarding these problems from the standpoint of fancied national interest, is every day giving place to a more humanitarian policy. Gladstone's idea of "public right as the governing idea of European politics" is more and more gaining the upper hand. The ideals in foreign policy represented by Cobden and Bright are the ideals that now control British public opinion. There are still plenty of reactionaries in England and Europe that might like to settle the Ottoman problem in the old discredited way, but they do not govern British public life at the present crisis. The England that will deal with the Ottoman Empire in 1919 is the England of Lloyd George, not the England of Palmerston and Disraeli.

For the first time, therefore, the world approaches the problem of the Ottoman Empire, the greatest blight in modern civilization, with an absolutely free hand. The decision will inform us, more eloquently than any other detail in the settlement, precisely what forces have won in this war. We shall learn from it whether we have really entered upon a new epoch; whether, as we hope, mediæval history has ended and modern history has begun.

If Contantinople is left to the Turk, if the Greeks, the Syrians, the Armenians, the Arabs and the Jews are not freed from the most revolting tyranny that history has ever known, we shall understand that the sacrifices of the last four years have been in vain, and that the much-discussed new ideals in the government of the world are the merest cant. Thus the United States has an immediate interest in the solution of this problem. The hints reaching this country that another effort may be made to prop up the Turk are not pleasing to us. We did not enter this war to set up new balances of power, to promote the interest of concessionaires, to make new partitions of territory, to satisfy the imperialistic ambitions of contending European powers, but to lend our support to that new international conscience that seeks to reorganize the world on the basis of justice and popular rights. The settlement of the Eastern question will teach us to what extent our efforts have succeeded.

If this mistake of propping up the Sultan's empire is not to be made again, either that empire must be divided among the great powers—a solution which is not to be considered for reasons which it is hardly necessary to explain—or one of these great powers must undertake its administration as a mandatary. The great powers in question are the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan. Of these only the first two are capable of assuming this duty. Lord Curzon has told me personally that for political and economic reasons Great Britain cannot assume the Ottoman mandate. Lloyd George has said essentially the same thing. And Stephane Lauzanne, who speaks in a semi-official capacity for France, said, in an interview Nov. 1 with a correspondent of THE TIMES:

"In the offer of a mandate to her America should see more than the selfish desire of Europe to involve her in European affairs. It is true she fears to be the centre of intrigues and difficulties. She fears distant complications. However, the question is nobler and higher than that. America is an admirable reservoir of energy. She holds the secret of that which is best in our modern life—to build largely and to build quickly. She has youth; she has power; she has wealth; she has that which she calls efficiency. We in Europe are old, poor, enfeebled, divided. It would be prodigiously interesting if America, after she has given us of her power, of her money and her material, should give us also an example.

"And what an example it would be if America were to accept the mandate for Constantinople! Here is a city which is one of the marvels of Europe and of the world, which is the jewel of the Orient, and which after twenty centuries of European civilization remains the home of wickedness and corruption. Every one disputes possession of its hills and harbors, and no one tries to make of it a great modern city which, rid of international intrigues and rid of politics, would be the shining pole of Europe. Only America can transform Constantinople; only America can establish herself there without suspicion of bad faith and without jealousy; only America can civilize the capital of Islam.

"To do that America has no need of regiments of soldiers or of cannon. She has need only of her workers and her constructors. A Hoover or a Davison would be enough. And America is full of Hoovers and Davisons."

I recognize the tremendous problems which confront us in our own country. Those problems must and will be solved. But the day is past when the individual citizen can permit absorption in his personal affairs to exclude the consideration of the community's or the nation's wellbeing. A new social conscience has manifested itself. And it is equally true that the United States, as a member of the League of Nations, must take an active and altruistic interest in world affairs, however pressing our own problems may seem. The European situation, indeed, is really a part of them. Our associates in the war cannot drift into bankruptcy and despair without involving the United States in the disaster. The losses we would suffer in money would be the least distressing, should the world fall into the chaos which is threatening. If we cannot solve our own problems and at the same time help Europe solve hers we must be impotent indeed.

So much, then, for the general principles involved; what are the practical details of such a mandate? Last May William Buckler, Professor Philip M. Brown, and myself joined in a memorandum to President Wilson, outlining briefly a proposed system of government for the Ottoman dominions. This so completely embodies my ideas that I reprint it here, with two slight omissions:

"The government of Asia Minor should be dealt with under three different mandates, (1) for Constantinople and its zone, (2) for Turkish Anatolia, (3) for Armenia. The reason for not uniting these three areas under a single mandate is that the methods of government required in each area are different. In order, however, to facilitate the political and economic development of the whole country, these three areas should be placed under one and the same mandatory power, with a single Governor in charge of the whole, to unify the separate administrations of the three States.

"Honest and efficient government in the Constantinople zone and in Armenia will not solve the problems of Asia Minor unless the same kind of government is also provided for the much larger area lying between Constantinople and Armenia, i. e., Turkish Anatolia. Constantinople and Armenia are mere fringes; the heart of the problem lies in Anatolia, of

Two American Women Visit a King and Queen

Their Stay of Several Days in the Rumanian Summer Palace Made Enjoyable by the Simple Manners of Marie and Ferdinand

By LILY C. MOREHEAD MEBANE.

HOWEVER democratic one may be, either in theory or in fact, it is impossible not to be thrilled at an invitation to visit the palace of a King!

I left Bucharest in the early morning of a perfect August day for Sinaia, the beautiful spot in the Carpathian Mountains where Mrs. Lindsay Patterson and myself were to spend several days with the King and Queen of Rumania. After we had left the hot, dusty city behind us, with each mile the air grew cooler and more exhilarating, and the route more wild and beautiful, with mountain streams and gorges on either side, and masses of wild flowers of the most varied and vivid colors. Up and up we climbed, until, almost too soon, so lovely was the ride, we reached Sinaia, which, besides containing the country palace of the royal family, is the home of the aristocracy of Bucharest. Before the war, during the reign of King Carol and Queen Carmen Sylva, the brilliant Summer Court was held at Sinaia.

We were received with great hospitality, and some ceremony, first by the Dame d'Honeur, (the first lady in waiting to the Queen,) and then by the King and Queen, and went at once into what we thought was simply luncheon, but which proved to be a birthday party for the second son, Prince Carol, 18 years old. Queen Marie, a rarely beautiful woman, wears, when in the Summer palace, the native peasant costume of marvelous embroidery and color, as do all the ladies in waiting. The gentlemen of the Court are in the Rumanian uniform, and the King, too, with many decorations. It was a glittering picture, and we were devoutly thankful for our uniforms of French blue. At least we did not spoil the scene by wearing everyday tailor-made gowns.

After drinking to the happiness and long life of the young Prince, who is extremely popular with the people; to the King and Queen, and to America, we all rose and stood while the Queen, then the King, Princess Mignon, and the Prince filed out. We, the guests, followed and joined the royal family. We found in that family the same ease, good breeding, and lack of restraint as in other families of culture the world over.

In the Old Summer Palace, at Sinaia, Favorite Residence of the Late Queen Carmen Sylva.

Queen Marie, who is the granddaughter of Queen Victoria, and also of Czar Alexander III., said to us, without the least trace of egotism: "I like my job and feel equal to it." Her personality pervades the Court, without which the Pelasor, in spite of its setting against the matchless beauty of the Carpathian Mountains, would be but a prosaic country house. Pelasor is the diminutive of Pelash, the former home of Carmen Sylva, and it was built by King Carol for the present King, then Crown Prince. In the Castle Pelash, named for the river which flows through the grounds, one might spend months, even years, enjoying the beauties of a marvelous collection of Gobelin tapestries, paintings, crystals, bowls of porphyry and priceless bibelots that Queen Carmen Sylva spent a lifetime in getting together. Begun in 1873, the palace was added to and beautified at intervals up to the time of the death of King Carol, in 1915, and it is a veritable treasure house of exquisite and valuable things.

What does one do when visiting a Queen? The thing which I enjoyed most was talking with, listening to, and looking at her Majesty. Not only has she a passionate love for beauty of color and line, but she has ability to create it, as is evidenced by some lovely paintings which she showed us. Her own rooms are bowers of light and beauty, with flowers everywhere. The room she likes the best of all opens on a balcony from which one looks out over the Carpathians, blue and pale purple in the distance, growing darker and more friendly as they came almost up to the palace gates.

After a motor ride through these mountains, as we sat in this sitting room, gleaming in tones of gold and brown from the hangings on the walls to the rugs on the floor, and watched the sun sink behind the mountains in a glory of crimson, we had tea together. Her Majesty spoke of her desire to visit America and to thank the American people for their generosity to her stricken country during this terrible war. Then came dinner. At the Queen's request we wore peasant costumes which we had bought in Bucharest. They did not appear quite so pretty, however, as we had thought them, when compared with the Queen's collection which she showed us after dinner, the King hovering around the table upon which they were spread and taking a lively interest in the show. The embroidery of the Rumanian peasant dress is noted for its beauty of color and design; unfortunately the Germans admired the embroideries so extravagantly that the country is almost denuded of them, and the Queen is trying to encourage the peasants to continue in the work of making the beautiful garments. She encouraged me very much in the wearing of them by presenting me with one of the most beautiful costumes in her collection.

Another day at Court. We met at 9:30 for breakfast. Everybody was there from the Queen down to the four little orphan boys who live in the palace and are being brought up by her Majesty. They stood between the King and Queen, who fed them bread and jam. The day was made up of work and play, as in every well regulated family. There were horseback rides and motoring. What pleased me particularly was that King Ferdinand took me for a walk over the grounds. I was struck by the simplicity, the directness and the modesty of his manner. I was told by some of the gentlemen at Court that his counsel was sought by the Ministers and his opinions regarded with great deference.

We said good-bye reluctantly and missed our train at Sinaia, then had a wild ride through the Carpathians to the next station. In the royal motor, with the horn insistently demanding the right of way, the King's flag waving in the breeze, we flew through the mountain passes, dashed up terrible heights, and down again to the valleys, passing village after village as in a nightmare, seeing the train every now and then in the distance and wondering if we should catch it. Finally in a neck to neck race of two miles we reached Pradael, on the Hungarian border—and waited an hour and a half! Such are the vagaries of the Orient Express.

How Dr. Frank Crane Inspired My Newly Won Prosperity

By Donald Walker

THE other day was the third time that I have heard myself referred to as a self-made man. I admit it has made me feel a little proud. While in a way I suppose I do merit that reference, still I know that it is not wholly accurate. For the first time I have decided to tell the little secret I have long kept to myself—to give credit in print to the man who inspired me to become what a few of my friends are good enough to call a self-made man. First I will go back five years.

At that time I held a comfortable position in a small but growing business, and managed to support my wife and child on a small salary. I had hopes of becoming the office manager some day, but it was a big stretch for my imagination. And here I am today—but that is getting ahead of my story.

One day I heard that the office manager had resigned. I was not long confirming the rumor, for I felt that at last my opportunity had arrived. I expected any minute to be told to take the place. Several days passed, and the anticipated order did not come. Instead a new man was brought in from the outside a week later, and I confess I felt resentment in being called upon to help install him in the position that I felt should have been mine.

At first I felt like throwing up my job. I was bitter at the injustice of the thing. Why did the firm have to go outside of the organization to get a new man when I could have filled the position? I felt I had a just grievance, so I went straight into the front office and asked frankly why I had been overlooked.

That interview was something of a shock to me, because I learned that I had not even been considered for the position. I was told in all friendliness that I was standing still. To use the exact words: "Hitched to a post," and when I countered in self-defense that I knew the business thoroughly, I was told "Yes, you know all the details of the business, and it would be hard on that account to replace you, but you are not growing with the business. It is not because you are lacking in ability or willingness to work, but you don't seem to think above your work or outside of your department, and an executive must have a broader viewpoint. He must be able to think clearly and decide constructively." That most uncomfortable five minutes' interview was filled with a lot of helpful suggestions, but the only other important thing which I remember was the parting shot.

"Learn the Secret of Right Thinking and Cultivate the Habit."

I needed just that sort of a jolt to set me on the right track. But I was puzzled to know how I could cultivate the habit of right thinking. How could I get the bigger, broader viewpoint? But that came later.

I began to study men who held important positions. I discovered that without exception they were men of broad vision.

I familiarized myself with the opinions of authorities. I listened to speeches of men notable in politics and business. They all seemed to have the thing I wanted, but somehow I could not grasp how they got it.

Then one day I discovered Dr. Frank Crane. I made his acquaintance through one of the leading magazines and later learned that he contributed daily a FOUR-MINUTE ESSAY to some sixty metropolitan newspapers in the United States and Canada. I began reading him religiously, and he soon gave me the key I needed and the rest was easy. Since then there has hardly been a day that I have not read one of Dr. Crane's FOUR-MINUTE ESSAYS. And, that is not all, my wife reads and enjoys Dr. Crane just as much as I do.

I read Dr. Crane for a mental tonic. He stimulated and inspired me. His swift, keen penetration; his clear and logical analysis; his understandable conclusions were a revelation to me. I particularly liked the way he tackled every-day problems and questions. His optimism put me in good humor, and his kindliness solaced and soothed me. He saw things in a big, clear, straightforward way and his knowledge opened wide the door to me to the great minds of all ages.

It was Dr. Crane who helped me to become what I am. Without his help I might have climbed a little way up the ladder, but to my present position NEVER. Most all the good things life has given me these last five years I can trace back directly to his inspirational influence.

He taught me how to think RIGHT. He helped me to use more forceful English. He helped me to win poise, self-control, determination, concentration, and will power. He made me more efficient in my business. And so I could go on giving tribute to the great good Dr. Crane has done for me. And, what is still more, I have met a lot of big men in the past five years who feel just as I do about Dr. Crane.

As I look back now to the time when the office managership seemed to me the pinnacle of success, I realize how tremendously Dr. Crane has widened my horizon; how infinitely more difficult success would have been without his help, and I am glad of this opportunity of publicly thanking Dr. Crane for what he has done for me.

Thousands of men and women throughout the country will hail the following announcement with joy—popular demand has prevailed upon Dr. Frank Crane to put his Four-Minute Essays into book form.

Every day ten million of the keenest minds in the country read Dr. Crane for a mental tonic. Fifty of the leading newspapers in the United States and Canada carry his daily contributions. He is a great exponent of the REAL AMERICAN philosophy. He is a message for the multitude.

He speaks forcibly yet simply. His thoughts are packed with inspiration and brisk American optimism. Wit and wisdom flow from his pen, and humanism tempers every phrase. His message is like a breath of fresh air that is as good for the brain as a walk in the open is good for the body.

He tackles the everyday problems of everyday people with his constructive and penetrating intellect. He goes straight to the heart of the subject and his conclusions are helpful. He says things swiftly and strongly, and men understand him. He inspires humanity to nobler and better things through his uplifting principles of human philosophy.

From President Wilson to the man in mill and factory, from the college professor to the cowboy on the Arizona ranch, all Americans look for what Dr. Crane has to say. He talks plain, ordinary United States common sense, always in good humor and optimism, and often with wit.

which the population is 75 per cent. Moslem.

"The main rules to be followed in dealing with this central district are:

"1. That it should not be divided up among Greeks, French, Italians, &c.

"2. That the Sultan should, under proper mandatory control, retain religious and political sovereignty over the Turkish people in Anatolia, having his residence at Brusa or Konia, both of which are ancient historic seats of the Sultanate.

"3. That no part of Anatolia should be placed under Greeks, even in the form of a mandate. The Greeks are entitled by their numbers to a small area surrounding Smyrna. Under no circumstances should Greece have a mandate over territory mainly inhabited by Turks.

"The above solution of the problem of Asia Minor means refusal to recognize secret deals such as the Pact of London and the Sykes-Picot Agreement, and especially the Italian claims to a large territory near Adalia. If Greeks and Italians, with their long-standing antagonism, are introduced into Asia Minor, the peace will constantly be disturbed by their rivalry and intrigues. Italy has no claim to any part of Anatolia, whether on the basis of population, of commercial interests, or of historic tradition.

"No solution of the Asia Minor problem which ignores the fact that its population is 75 per cent. Turkish can be considered satisfactory or durable. The only two countries having any prospect of successfully holding a mandate over Anatolia are Great Britain and the United States.

"The large missionary and educational interests of the United States in Anatolia must be adequately protected, and it is illusory to imagine that this can be done if Anatolia is subjected to Greek, French, or Italian sovereignty.

"Only a comprehensive, self-contained scheme such as that above outlined can overcome the strong prejudices of the American people against accepting any mandate. To cure the ills of Turkey and to deliver her peasantry from their present ignorance and impoverishment requires a thorough reconstruction of Turkish institutions, judicial, educational, economic, financial, and military.

"This may appeal to the United States as an opportunity to set a high standard, by showing that it is the duty of a great power, in ruling such oppressed peoples, to lead them toward self-respecting independence as their ultimate goal."

The Armenians are wholly unprepared to govern themselves or to protect themselves against their neighbors. Mere supervision will not be adequate. What the Armenian State requires is a kind of receivership, and we should take it over in trust, to manage it until it is time to turn it over when it is governmentally solvent and on a going basis. Anatolia should be under a separate management and have its own Parliament; its Executive should be a Deputy Governor under a Governor General at Constantinople. The three Governments should have a common coinage, similar tariff requirements, and unified railroad systems; and in other respects should be federated somewhat as States in this country are.

The commercial importance of such an arrangement is enormous, for Constantinople must continue as Russia's chief outlet to the world, and it is the gateway to the East. The commercial policy would, of course, be an open-door policy. All nations would have equality of opportunity in trade and would be free in regard to colonization. As a matter of fact, the commercial situation is of little importance to us. Prior to the war our foreign trade amounted to only about 6 per cent. of our total trade; and although it increased during the war to about 11 per cent., it is likely to recede soon to the neighborhood of 8 per cent. It will consist largely of raw materials, such as wheat, cotton, copper, and coal, which other nations must get from us, whether or no. Foreign trade is a mere incident; our prosperity is not what we are fighting for.

It need not require the extension of large credits from us to put these nations on a sound footing. They could be financed by bond issues issued in each case against the resources of the territories involved. If the United States held the mandates, there would be no difficulty, I apprehend, in floating such issues. And as for the policing necessary, that need be very small, provided a man of strong will and quick decision, fertile in resources and of unshakable determination, were assigned to the Governorship General at Constantinople. The opportunity would be a great one for an American completely imbued with our institutions. The succession of able pro-Consuls whom we have sent to the Philippines shows that we shall not lack such men.

We shall surrender our mandates over these three territories when we have finished our work. We shall not necessarily leave them all at the same time; we shall turn each one over to its people when the public opinion of the world, expressed in the League of Nations, has decided that it is capable of directing its own affairs. It might be necessary for us to remain in Constantinople longer than elsewhere, and there is reason to suppose that Constantinople will become the Washington of the Balkans and perhaps of Asia Minor, the central governing power of the Balkan confederation. But if left without the guidance and help of outside intelligence and capital, those peoples will necessarily continue to retrograde. They must have security of property if they are to have an incentive to labor. Unless they have that, the blight of Southeastern Europe will remain, and the Turks, originally a marauding band of conquerors, who have held a precarious and undeserved footing for more than 500 years on European soil, will continue to menace its peace and safety. If ever there was a chance to put them out, we have that chance now. The United States is the only Government which can undertake the purification of the Balkans without incurring ill-will and jealousy. We need not indulge in overpolite phrases. This is the only nation which can accept these mandates and maintain international good feeling. It is absolutely our fault if the Turk remains in Europe.

The difficulties inherent in this situation can be cured only at the source. The League of Nations, when it comes into being, must not operate exclusively through a central agency at Geneva, because it cannot learn in that way the real difficulties and the wants of dependent peoples. That can be done only in the directest way, through representatives on the spot. The people, moreover, want to be heard. They are wonderfully relieved after they have had their say. That fact has its touch of pathos, perhaps to some a touch of the ridiculous; but it is a factor of the human equasion which we cannot afford to ignore. And if we supply American tribunals, disinterested and just, before which these peoples can state their grievances and their aspirations, we will have taken a long step toward their pacification and stabilization.

High Art Home-Made, or Paris Robbed of Her Prey

War-Time Conquest of the Field of American Commercial Design by Native Artists and the New French Invasion That Threatens It

By HELEN BULLITT LOWRY.

WHO is going to design the striped silk for Labor's new twelve-dollar-and-a-half shirt, and who is to plan the new velvet frock for Labor's wife? Who will decide whether the new Spring wardrobe of the Pickfords and Theda Baras shall have full skirts or lean skirts? In short, is America or Paris going to dictate styles and periods and designs for all of those expensive articles which our new moneyed proletariat of commerce and art will be buying by the dozen? And what about our old discriminating public—those who are not war babies, economically speaking? Will Paris or New York dictate their frocks and their materials and their household decorations?

Carry these questions with you to the manufacturers, importers, trade journals, publicity agents, and museums of art, and you bring back such a contradictory collection of opinion that still the wonder grows that all of these persons can be authorities at the same time on that self-same subject.

"Paris, why she ain't in it any more!" says one American manufacturer of gowns, with a comprehensive gesture of dismissal. "And the sooner the papers start to boosting American styles like California boosts everything in the State the sooner Paris will find out who's running styles this year. Don't the papers in this country know nothing about patriotism?"

"Will America lose her prestige in the industrial arts now that Paris is back?" was the way the question was answered by Richard Bach, Associate in Industrial Art at the Metropolitan Museum. "That is a paradox. She has not any prestige to lose."

The Associate in Industrial Art had been caught in a pessimistic mood, but not so a certain "party" in one of the big silk houses which is strongly identified with the improvement in American textile design since 1914.

"Prestige—may I alter that word?" His soul lay revealed as he spoke. "May I say—not prestige—but supremacy?"

The facts, it appears, lie midway between Pollyanna and the pessimist. Before the war Paris dictated costume and textile designs to the whole United States, east and west, white and black, eventually. Then war came, and America had to design new frocks and hats and silks for herself, or else dress exactly as she did last season, which is not done in the best families outside of China and the Balkan tangle.

And behold America discovered that she could design. And she found herself turning out fascinating textiles—in 1915 there were some hooped dancing frocks and in 1918 there were the long one-trouser-leg skirts, which were actually American creation from the blue print "elevations" on. Indeed, a résumé of what this country has accomplished in decorative industrial art—on and off—in the last five years may be had at the Natural History Museum in an exhibition which opens there on Nov. 12.

What does the future hold? That is now the question. For the most part of these five epochal years France has been really too busy to worry much about what American designers were doing, although she did send back a Poiret or so from the trenches to keep the American buyer in line. But now France has had time to notice, and France has come back. And France is still unquestionably the style source of the world—just as she has been since the Grand Monarch said, "Let there be Art"—and even further back still, when the Stuarts ruled England and imported royal follies from Paris.

Yet Paris resumes her fashion reign with a difference. Where once she dictated, now Paris will influence. There is all the distinction between the two terms that there is in the manner orders were given to cooks before and since the war.

Until 1914 American costumers hied them to Paris and purchased models. These models were copied verbatim for expensive ladies east of the Alleghanies and copied discreetly with extra folds of "chiffon" for equally expensive ladies west of the Alleghanies—usually with a Paris label sewed in for good measure. Then the first "proofs" were copied in cheaper materials and by cheaper hands, (there were still cheap hands to be had in those days,) and the results were sold in the department stores. Then they were copied again more cheaply still, and displayed on Fourteenth Street for the benefit of a proletariat which had not yet strolled over to Fifth Avenue except at luncheon hour. The original models had of course been sold in the first place to society leaders, and to successful actresses with bank accounts, and to the wives of Chicago millionaires. And America lapped up the styles gratefully, even as did Mr. Salteena his whisky and his soup.

An American-Designed Theatrical Costume by Travis Banton. The Theatre Gave the American Costume Designer His First Chance to Express Himself.

Now the technique will be quite different—at least so the more important of the American costumers assure you. The American costumer is attending Paris this Fall, but, instead of models, ideas will be brought home—much to the perplexity of the customs officers. Only enough models will be purchased by the American costumer of this new creative class to gain the entrée to the best Parisian houses. That entrée the American designer must still have or close up shop. An American costume designer, Travis Banton, explains why Paris will still lead.

"American costumers have proved that they can create quite as artistic crowns as the French ever have produced. But back of the French costumer—even back of the great designers like Callot and Worth—are the French artists, the painters who do not consider it below their dignity to design costumes. The Drians, Fortunys, and Barbiers, are the real originators of French fashions. Until American artists of equal creative force get into the game, America will follow, not lead. Now, the eminent American artists consider everything but 'oil paintings' beneath their dignity."

According to this designer, the meteoric soaring of costume design in this country is closely allied with the artistic stage movement. Indeed, the American costumer's chief medium for getting his creations across to the American public has been the stage—for style cannot be fed with a spoon to any public, however docile, unless there be the spoon. The popular American actress was forced by the uncertainties of foreign importations to depend entirely on the American costumer. Therefore she wore his styles and standardized them for the New York public. At the same time, the movie queens, who have more money to spend on their clothes than any man, woman, or child in history, were arraying themselves in fine American raiment, and syndicating the styles wherever the cinema handle turns—which is from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand, not excepting Indiana and Missouri.

The whole artistic stage movement in this country, indeed, hardly dates back of the season of 1915-16 when Granville Barker arrived with "shocking" simplicity and the Diaghileff productions of the Ballet Russe, with its Bakst costumes and setting, loosened up color in America at one burst.

The famous Beaux Arts Ball of the Winter of 1916 had an immeasurable influence on American styles—the first of that colorful series of masquerades where we did not go clothed in customary "pierrot" and "Spanish" costumes, but painted even the old, familiar skin purple or emerald green, if such suited our artistic temperament. Real artists had turned to and proved, just for an evening's sport, that they could create atmosphere in clothes. The whole fashion in stage costume changed overnight from the obvious to the bizarre. Ziegfeld minxes were arrayed from head to foot (and in some of the scenes only part of the way from head to foot) in daring costumes created by American designers.

Fortunately, too, the American artists did not hold quite so coldly aloof from "costume plays" as they do from just "regular clothes," and so some few American artists have had their names connected with the stage movement, notably Ben Ali Haggin, Robert Edward Jones, and Peter Myer.

From the stage, color got into society—for the first time since we stopped using red tablecloths. But there were no French designers loose to cater to the new enthusiasm while it was hot. And right here was where the American designer got his innings. He had a new motif to work on at last. Since 1914 there had been only timid changes on the pre-war mode—changes done with mental tracing paper. The new motif of complex color combinations called for imagination, and, for the first time, the American costumer experienced the joys of creation. He will be no more content to go back to the old tracing paper rôle than will the William Silvanus Baxters of the world return to "short pants."

But still there remains the indisputable fact that in Bakst, a Russian artist, was the impetus of the movement. Until America has her Barbiers dreaming dreams of the stuff that Persian miniatures are made of, and her Fortunys drawing their inspiration from the draperies of the Greek, America will follow—all of which makes one wonder who did design those inimitable draperies of the de Milo and who was the costumer for Nike of Samothrace.

Whether the American woman will prefer the American adaptation of the French artist's original motif is a question; like the question of the winning horse, it is one that only time can solve. According to the editor of an important dress trade paper, the French are not in a psychological mood at this time to create American styles.

"The French are still experiencing a hysterical and joyous reaction, while American women had jogged back into the normal a month after the armistice. This madness of profound relief has no general counterpart in this country—and styles must have a universal psychological appeal to really 'take.' Moreover, the sex problem plays a part in clothes, camouflage it as you will. French women, outnumbering the men many fold, will wear more obvious clothes for a generation to come. You have seen already that American women have refused the ultra short skirt and the ultra low street dress. That is the answer."

Protected by no such convenient psychological and biological nuisance, however, is America's new school of textile design, which will have to rise or fall on intrinsic artistic merits.

Southward With the Coffee-Pot Tourist

It Is Not Only the Spendthrifts but the Thrifty Also Who Migrate to Florida for the Summer of Their Wintertime

(Text and Sketches by Norman Borchardt.)

WHATEVER in the Spring the young man's fancy lightly turns to, and just as surely as the sap in that season of etherial madness rises in the tree trunks, there comes in the Fall to all Northern mankind and birdkind the urge of the migratory instinct southward. It isn't only the plutocrats and society lovers that go to have their pictures taken for the illustrated papers at Palm Beach in their Winter splendor of Summer raiment. It is likewise those who though neither one nor another are both. And even in this spendthrift season, when a world's ransom is being lavished on the pomp and circumstance of peace, there are still thrifty tourists, as well as the other sort.

They, too, go down in flocks, as do the other birds. Society lovers? Yes, yet the sort of society that goes with home, "and be it ever so humble." Plutocrats? Comparatively, yes. Plutocrats to their villages or farm neighbors, though not always to the undiscerning larger world. These cherish their home comforts, and with the simplicity of our fathers' fathers, before diners intruded or fastened themselves on the trains' tails, they travel with their own lunches of fried chicken and hard boiled eggs, put up conveniently in shoe boxes. They carry also a coffee pot from which their kind gains its name among those sophisticated travelers.

For with this receptacle, standing in line at the Pullman buffet, they get the steaming beverage with which to cap off their homely meal—not to be scorned either for quality and quantity, not to mention the absence of the bill.

Down the west coast of Florida, or into the interior, mainly go these "Coffee-Pot" tourists; these people from a home to a home. Their idea is to live, not in hotels of dances and orchestras, nor on beaches in bathing suits that tempt the camera, but in furnished rooms and boarding houses. They may do better—a family may even furnish a room themselves with crates and boxes gathered by a prudent and thrifty parent from behind the store of a complaisant grocer.

And here we introduce a pair, that you may recognize them unmistakably when next you visit this Land of Flowers: Husband and wife, for a long time married and having gone through the Winter of harsh life together, are now come to the Spring of peaceful old age again. He wears bushy sideburns and whiskers tinged with gray, and clothes new but not pretentious. She has grown stout and motherly, (for the children are sending them down,) and her hair is also feeling the twilight.

One day a nice "Coffee-Pot" lady—or so she seemed—came into a Florida house of "Furnished rooms to let," but with the qualification "No light housekeeping." She was followed by two husky, dusky damyan, carrying a trunk which seem to their corded muscles "sholy wux heavy." Half way up the stairs the trunk escaped and crashed to the landing. It burst open, disclosing that which caused the touring lady to wander further. For when the crash came, potatoes and onions rolled in all directions, and a small gas stove lay atop a side of bacon.

She, or they, had come prepared for a long siege against the voracious tourist wolves against which she had been warned. In spite of such mishaps they are the sort that find and make, among many of their kind, the home pleasures they have come so far to carry on.

In one large town, [illegible] the frost line, in a beautiful [illegible] park, thoughtful official persons have arranged a place for their special amusement. In an open space among the palms are set up croquet stakes and wickets, while about are tables under the shade of live-oak and palmetto, where the men all sit for hours absorbed over their checkers and jig-saw puzzles.

A Pair of the Coffee-Pot Tourists.

Not far away other men, in their shirt-sleeves and comfortably collarless, are "pitching horseshoes," giving a most home village-like touch to the scene.

A few among them, having "been there before," are nothing loath to initiate their more verdant brothers and sisters who have newly and for the first time come down. Such a newcomer passing a tree on which was clinging, away up the trunk, a spiky airplant, was heard to ask such a guide what that plant might be. And, in answer, the old-timer replied, "A pineapple, o'course." And another arrival was heard to tell his wife that there were olives growing on certain palm trees. Yet another was sure that the ever-present "razor-back" hogs and pigs were some strange variety of sheep. And so on.

There is a story of an enterprising real estate man who had high hopes of an auction of lots on an outlying island, near a large and growing Florida city. He chartered a large steamer in which to carry those interested in the sale. It was a clear, beautiful day, and hundreds came. But he sold very few lots. In fact, not many of his guests troubled to listen to the auctioneer. He had drawn the "Coffee-Pot" tourists with their knit bags and pasteboard boxes of lunch, their children and wives, come to enjoy the ride and outing; two hours out and two back, with a band to add music to the lovely day and a fish-fry at the island. And they came, thinking at last they were reaping the harvest of this land of plenty.

For all that, these are the people to whom Florida holds out arms of welcome. For from these so-called "Coffee-Pot" tourists come those who later make the State their home, start farms, and settle in the smaller towns.

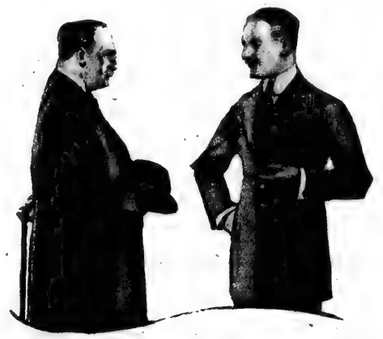
"WHAT IS IT ALL ABOUT, ANYWAY?"



HE was a man about 40 or 45—a trifle too stout for his age and height, but of the type you would size up instantly as "a successful business man."

He hesitated a trifle as he entered the reception room, and it was evident that he did not have an appointment.

The office secretary approached him. "Is there anything I can do, Sir?"

The stout man turned quickly. He smiled kindly, and his blue eyes twinkled.

"I should say there is! Do you think you could spare me a few minutes and show me around the Institute? I've been reading a lot about it and I've been wondering what it is all about, anyway."

So the stout gentleman of 40 or 45 was shown through the Institute—first the Examining Rooms, then the Laboratory and finally the X-Ray Department.

Next day there came a letter, briefly phrased, as you might expect such a man to phrase it:—"Please advise me when I may have an appointment for an examination."

Here was a man to whom minutes meant money, yet he saw the need of setting aside an hour or an hour-and-a-half each year for a thorough physical examination.

It occurs to us that there may be many men and women who "have been reading a lot about the Life Extension Institute" and who are wondering "what it is all about, anyway."

We extend to you all a cordial invitation to come and see. Meantime, the coupon printed below will bring you further details and descriptive literature.

The Life Extension Institute was established by a group of scientists, publicists, and business men who desired to provide a self-supporting central institution of national scope devoted to the science of increasing human happiness and efficiency—a responsible and authoritative source from which the public might draw knowledge and inspiration in avoiding needless sickness and premature death.

A provision has been made for the utilization of a substantial portion of the dividends in public health work, under the trusteeship of ex-President William Howard Taft and Professor Irving Fisher. Two-thirds of the common stock is held in trust by Mr. Taft and Professor Fisher for this purpose.

The Life Exte[illegible] Institute works hand-in-hand with the highest ideals of modern scientific medicine. It is irrevocably opposed to fads and quacks and charlatans.

The Institute gives appropriate hygienic guidance and instruction to all its members, but does not include medical or surgical treatment in its service. If the impairments found are serious, the member is told of the need of medical, surgical or dental attention, and is informed of the type of treatment that would be most advantageous.

The Life Extension Institute has a Hygiene Reference Board of one hundred leading scientific men, including the Surgeons-General of the Army (retired) and Navy, and U. S. Public Health Service, several ex-Presidents of the American Medical Association, Commissioners of Public Health, and others interested in public welfare. A complete list will be furnished on application.

The Institute's Health Service consists of a thorough physical examination of the whole body, together with quarterly chemic and microscopic examinations of the urine, review of the member's personal and family history, daily living habits and health problems, detailed reports, hygienic guidance and instructions, monthly health journals, etc. The fee is $15 yearly.

It makes no difference where you live. In addition to its staff of twenty examining physicians in the Head Office in New York, the Life Extension Institute has more than 6,000 Examining Physicians in principal cities and towns throughout the United States and Canada.

The Institute has its own pathological laboratory and X-Ray Department. Thousands of tests are made here monthly—both for our own members and for outside physicians.

Examinations of subscribers who live in New York and vicinity are made at the head office of the Institute, 25 West Forty-fifth Street—on appointment by telephone or letter—between the hours of 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. Evenings, between 7 P. M. and 10 P. M.

Convenient appointments can also be arranged with the Institute's examiners in the member's home district or city. Women physicians are available at the main office for the examination of women members who prefer them. Anyone interested in public health, personal hygiene or preventive medicine is cordially invited to personally investigate the work the Institute is doing.

Some Health Nuggets From the Literature of The Life Extension Institute

The business man or desk worker should learn to sit correctly at his desk, with the chest arched forward, and abdomen in, feet crossed and weight resting on the full length of the thighs. A few deep respirations occasionally will stir up the circulation and help prevent brain fag. The alternate contraction and relaxation of the entire muscular system can be practised while one is dictating or reviewing papers.

Skins differ just as hearts, kidneys, brains, livers and nervous systems differ. Where there is a tendency to skin trouble and the cause cannot be traced to some direct injury, infection or parasite, a thorough overhauling of the body and life of the individual is necessary.

Genuine rheumatism is caused by infection, by bacteria that travel through the tissues. Rheumatism is not due to uric acid, and most remedies advertised for such conditions are useless, if not harmful. The source of the infection should be sought, whether in the tonsils, tooth sockets, ears, nose, etc., and the focus of infection removed.

A good complexion is a social obligation; it is a joy to look upon, though the face be plain. It suggests health and sweetness and soundness, and is an asset in the struggle for existence.

Dust is the aeroplane of the microbe.

Instead of spending money for remedies which our common sense should tell us are mere catchpennies, we should spend more time and money in avoiding illness. One visit a year to the physician for keeping well may save many visits for actual illness. It costs less to "keep well" than it does to "get well."

Don't exaggerate your own importance in the scheme of nature. A pain in your little finger is not going to wreck the universe, whoever you may be. You owe it to yourself, to your family, and to your country to keep your body in good trim, but not to "mollycoddle" it or spend your time "watching yourself live." Do your duty by your body; have it examined periodically, and then get into the game of life and play it—squarely. Don't try to beat the game by sharp practice with nature.

It is safe to say that fully 80% of the deaths in the United States annually from organic diseases of the kidneys and urinary system, and of the heart and circulatory system (including apoplexy and paralysis), could be postponed from a few days to a number of years, if we could teach the people personal hygiene—how to guard against these afflictions—and to have periodic health examinations to detect the presence of trouble before it becomes firmly seated.

The purpose of our Health Service is not only to detect disease, but to make a spot map, as it were, of the individual and record any defect or deficiency, either in the body or the life of the individual, the correction of which would prolong his life, and render it happier, more useful and more effective.

If preventive medicine is to bestow on man its richest service, the time must come when every citizen will submit himself to a thorough medical examination once a year or oftener.

A thorough examination of the nose, mouth and throat is most important. Nasal obstructions, chronic catarrh, adenoids, infected tonsils, infected tongue (the root is often infected), gums and teeth, all invite not only colds and winter troubles, but other forms of chronic organic diseases.

A New Wisdom in Museum Acquisitions

Art at Home and Abroad

"He Lives by His Wits," by Frank Duveneck. Recently Sold to a Western Collector.

RECENT reports from the museums of art throughout the country are very encouraging to the younger artists. They indicate two tendencies—one toward the acquisition of pictures and other works of art by these young artists; the other toward the acquisition of a kind of art that is not very often seen in this country and has distinction and subtlety, or in the case of work by our own artists of the past, toward their less familiar and often more interesting accomplishment.

The Worcester Museum has acquired a remarkably beautiful Odilon Redon, representing the most exquisite achievement of that artist, who began to paint just as he began to grow old, and who, in his sensitive visionary paintings gave immortality to his dying youth. The young art students who have a tinge of mysticism in their minds will be able to see how an artist may express his mystic visions without losing control of his material or ceasing to be sane and rational.

The Boston Museum has acquired John Sargent's "The Road," which so much more successfully than his symbolic decorations embodies the sense of a living and gloriously continuing history of the march of men and the march of souls. In its realism and its swift precision of statement there is a poetry that will appeal to the modern mind wholesomely scornful of vague thinking.

The Detroit Museum has acquired Leon Kroll's "In the Country," a composition that in a manner so different from Whistler's exemplifies Whistler's conviction that art should conceal art. Apparently a commonplace moment in country life seen casually and thrown on the canvas with a careless security that it will fall right somehow, the composition in reality is carefully studied and reveals an architectonic sense that brings every detail into organic relation with a structural framework of great dignity. This museum announces with its current bulletin the change in its management. It has become The Detroit Institute of Art of the City of Detroit, the municipality having accepted the full responsibility of its ownership and management. Detroit and St. Louis are the first two cities in which the ownership and management of the Museum of Art are actually vested in the city, and it will be extremely interesting to watch the development of the museums under the new conditions.

Besides the interest shown by the museum in art of the unacademic type, the industrial collector has begun to look for the men whose names awoke little enthusiasm twenty years ago.

The picture by Frank Duveneck, which we reproduce, has gone to a Western collector to take its place among the works of Wyant, Blakelock, and Inness that have stirred salesrooms with "record prices." All that a collector wants is, in Duveneck, merit and rarity. A quaint story is told of his having sold a portrait many years ago for $300 and later, wishing to give it to the Cincinnati Museum, he offered $10,000 for it—and failed to get it. For those who always have loved their Duveneck, prices will have nothing to do with the case, but they are very amusing to mere students of human nature.

The Theresa Bernstein paintings at the Milch Galleries have a sincerity of feeling and expression and also a personal force that make them interesting. The artist suggests even in her slighter canvases a pressure of mood and a fervor that take them out of the region of the commonplace even where she is most an interpreter of commonplace types. At first glance her "Opera Lobby" looks like a somewhat heavy satire on a social theme. The men and women thronging the lobby are neither quite grotesque nor quite vulgar, but they are wholly and oppressively stupid. They seem to have come from a denser element—to be like fish tossed up by a turn of fortune high on the shore and into an atmosphere that is alien to them and destroys their life. That is what you think if you look at them with the conventional idea of opera in your mind and also the notion that Miss Bernstein is preaching a sermon. Then you see how the canvas is merely a big piece of weighty decoration, its hot color, its swollen forms, its emphasized characterization, playing into one impression of large masses under a hot light moved by slow powerful rhythms.

The other canvases, however they may differ in subject matter, give a similar impression. In the "Patriotic Parade" the Library and the Lions and the "Treat 'Em Rough" tank wear the same aspect of brooding force moving in an atmosphere of sullen heat. Her "Sunset" burns darkly, her "Late Summer Afternoon" shows a village enjoying its siesta like a wild beast of the jungle, half awake and alert for danger, and not in the least like the tame Tabby towns of our civilized world. It is this note of savagery, of a reality that disdains sophistication, that causes these canvases to be remembered as personages in the slippery art world where things are so apt to turn out sheep in wolves' clothing. Miss Bernstein's art may be too wolfish at times for our comfort—note "The Connoisseurs"—but it never is sheepish.

In the exhibition of modern art at the Scott & Fowles Gallery are canvases that will seem anything but modern to the youngsters who hadn't yet forgotten how to creep when they were being painted; but they are sufficiently modern to make us wish that an exhibition could be got together of work so distinguished, done by the living men who hate exhibitions but whose pictures will be the gems of fastidious collections after no more of them may be painted. One of the pictures shown is by William Sartain, an Arab water carrier beside his water jar at the well. Its simplicity and breadth of light and the lovely arrangement of wheat yellow with turquoise and white make it a true gem to be placed where the great Americans gather. Another picture is an early landscape by Charles Melville Dewey, and aside from its intrinsic beauty is exceedingly interesting as showing the anatomy of his later style. You may say of him just what Whistler said of himself, that his style never changed. Only in these early paintings you do not need to be so intelligent in order to see what is there. For one thing you will notice what careful observation will prove to be true of every one of the artist's works: that the foreground, often a neglected stretch of daubed canvas in the work of inferior men, is provided with a wealth of interest for every square inch of space. There is no area so small that it has not something to say to you and a distinct part to play in the harmony of the whole.

In the exhibition of decorative furniture and carvings by Mrs. Kenyon Cox there is, not unnaturally, much to remind us of Italian work in this kind. Mrs. Cox has adopted the forms of Italian furniture and its color without rigid adherence to models, but with a frank devotion to the styles of Italy. She works with wood and gesso, blue pigment and gilding, and her chairs and boxes and chests are wholly delightful as notes of color and form with unpretentious craftsmanship. They are shown admirably in the rooms of the Willow Brook Company under the guardianship of Evangeline Stillman, the daughter-in-law of that deep-eyed Marie Stillman whose beauty lives in Rossetti's pictures and whose sister was the model for Whistler's "Princess of the Land of Porcelain." All about the place are evidences of the family genius for beauty. One of them is a charming statuette by Effie Stillman, who married the nephew of Anne Thackeray and whose principal work in this country is the statue of Senator Bayard. Thus all sorts of notes of association are struck, and the result is a curious harmony of literary and aesthetic feeling into which the furniture of Mrs. Cox plays with extraordinary felicity. If it were far less charming than it is, however, it would call for the warmest welcome, as its exhibition is a step in the direction of letting the public see what an artist can do with art that is neither pictures nor sculpture. Some day we may have an exhibition of the work of this kind that has been done here and there by people whose minds are so filled with artistic ideas that they turn naturally and without the slightest encouragement toward various forms of expression. We could have Mr. Murphy's and Mr. Kuehne's picture frames and Mr. McRae's chairs and Mr. Kuehne's beds and a mantelpiece by Francis Jones, and quite a large number of other things that might wake up the dear public to a sense of what it could have an' it would.

Gertrude V. Whitney is showing her war sculpture this week at her Eighth Street studio, and, in having the more important pieces placed in the outer court against a background of evergreens, is giving the work the great advantage of a favorable environment. Most of the things shown are in the nature of sketches or impressions. Mr. du Bois in his preface to the catalogue says of them that Mrs. Whitney "caught them out of a war-ridden air" after seeing war through the medium of hospitals and with not overdistant glimpses of the front for five months in the Winter and Spring of 1914-15. He adds: "They are neither the statements of a war correspondent nor of a soldier. They have nothing of that naïve conscientiousness which asks that the craftsman push his work beyond the point of his vision. In supply of such fact they are as nebulous as their inspiration." The right word is "nebulous," and in this quality they very well express most of our thinking and even our feeling about the recent war. They tell us of life spilt and strength lost and of heroism, and nothing of the primitive zest for fighting that seems to have been at the service of the men when it was most needed. They make us see the war in a mist as nearly every one except the actual fighters did see it, and even for many of them it was the dark forest. So the sculptures by Mrs. Whitney are true records of a mood, which probably is what she intended them to be.

Poor Little Rich Girl and Her Art

Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's Struggles to Be Taken Seriously as a Sculptor Without Having Starved in a Garret

THE world has a certain number of pet conventions which it coddles and nurses with tender care. One of these is the myth that none but the poor may succeed in art, and that genius cannot grow full-size without bare-walled attic and empty larders. There is an inclination to turn up the nose at the artist whose early days are not to be described by the term "struggling."

If a hardy soul with a gift for painting or sculpture comes out the class which knows not the hard necessity of attics and garrets and empty larders, what happens then? Is the world still adamant in its skepticism, and does the poor little rich artist have to make up for the lack of struggle for a mere living by struggling doubly hard against a public prejudice that refuses to take him or her seriously? If so, in the end, no doubt, the coddlers of the conventions are appeased. But the way of the rich would-be artist has been made a thorny one.

A self-confessed example of the poor little rich girl in American art is Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, by birth a Vanderbilt. Today she is holding an exhibition of her work in her own studio, but it took years of continual grind and knocking against public prejudice before what she did was taken other than lightly.

"When I first started the sculpture work," Mrs. Whitney said the other day, "my friends took the attitude of a group of people watching one of their number performing a difficult parlor trick. It half amused them, half interested them, but few of them took the thing seriously. However, one is always amusing to one's friends. That is one of the rights of friendship. They neither could nor would understand why anybody who didn't have to work, who didn't have to spend a number of hours over a mess of clay, should do so of her own volition; and, what's more, should do it because she wanted to and because it meant something to which to look forward.

"It was not especially easy to do work with this spirit constantly hovering over me and constantly being expressed. Not only did I have to learn how to make my fingers more facile, but I had to fight, fight all the time to break down the walls of half-sympathetic and half-scornful criticism based on no other concept than the one that it wasn't done by people in my position.

"A few years passed, and several of my things began to attract some notice. One of my figures, a six-foot image of a man, was sent out to the St. Louis Fair. Then a decided change came over those who had previously been inclined to laugh at the work. They were somewhat impressed by the favorable opinion of the recognized artists. And here let me say that the artists themselves were always kind and helpful and encouraging in their attitude.

"But no sooner had I succeeded in breaking down a portion of the wall of the prejudice of my friends than I found another, a much mightier one, staring me in the face. The public at large refused to believe that I was doing anything serious. The people I met were all very nice about it. Very. In the manner that a fond parent pats a wayward child on the head. In a manner that implied that everything was lovely and sweet, but that I should get over it in time.

"I remember distinctly the criticism that was passed on the figure at the fair. People would look at me, then at the figure, then make the bland assertion that they could not understand how a woman my size could build up a statue of that height. Mind you, I am not feeling sorry for myself. Not a bit. I am simply telling you this to give you some idea of the type of criticism.

"However, it was a case of going on or proving to my friends and the public at large that they were right in their contention that wealth and talent were alien to each other. Shortly after this it was proposed to me to model a group for an important public building being put up in Washington at the time. At last, it seemed, I was actually getting to a point where I could definitely convince the world that my work was taken seriously. Highly elated, I started out to meet the appointment with the men in charge. I came, I heard, and I discovered there was a string attached to the assignment.

"I was informed kindly, considerately, and politely that my work was liked, admired, and prized, that I was the only person to do a group of the kind that was contemplated, but—but—well, the movement was in need of funds, and subscriptions to it would be highly welcome. It was made quite clear that the interest taken in me as a sculptor was greatly enhanced by the fact that I was first a woman of wealth. The whole thing was done very diplomatically. The men were kindly and courteous. It just happened that at the moment they were placed in an uncomfortable position where money perhaps was more to be desired than art. I was just as diplomatic as they were. I was just as kind and courteous. I assured them that, much as I should like to accept the commission, I could not do so unless the string were removed. It was. I did the work, but I did not subscribe to the fund. I couldn't very well under the conditions.

"I spent a number of Winters in France. During that time I lived in a studio among the other student artists of the country. My presence there caused no comment or criticism of any sort. France is different in this respect. I do not know whether the country is more broadminded or naturally more kindly to artistic effort of any sort. But the fact remains that an artist, whatever his station, is taken in on his worth, and helped along with a thought to the possibility of his some day doing something worth while. The attitude is a receptive one. 'Show us what you can do.' The surroundings in which you live make no difference to them either way. You are neither scorned for poverty nor condemned for wealth. As a matter of fact, the last is highly desirable. It helps so many others to get along in the camaraderie that makes student life in Paris so happy.

"One of the strongest prejudices against which a woman in my position has to fight is working in a studio. Again, it is matter of convention. It is all right for a poor struggling artist to seek out a place of seclusion where he can have his north light. It is conceded to be necessary to him. He can't work without it. But let a woman who does not have to work for her livelihood take a studio to do the work in which she is most intensely interested and she is greeted by a chorus of horror-stricken voices, a knowing lifting of the eyebrows, or a twist of the mouth that is equally expressive. And much more condemnatory. Again I say, I am not complaining at the treatment that I received; I have no cause to complain; I should not, perhaps, be doing the work that I am doing today if it were not for the battle I had to fight to show that I was not merely amusing myself.

"I understand perfectly the attitude that people take. I understand perfectly that in a good many instances they are justified in taking that attitude. The renting of studios has become fashionable among a number of young women who desire to be what they call in their most expressive moments 'free.' They are free as far as doing any work is concerned. A good many of them furnish their studios beautifully. Therein, perhaps, lies their contribution to art. They spend half an hour daily messing up a palette of paints or a lump of clay, and therein, I say, lies their injustice to art. Therein, too, lies the injustice to those who are honest in their desire to devote themselves to their work. Conclusions are based on experience with a number of instances. It is natural that the few should be condemned for what the majority have apparently proved to be a truism.

"To go on, however, about this matter of breaking down the wall of public prejudice. Time and again I discovered that where a group of laymen had to decide between two people a commission or assigning a commission to an artist, the woman of wealth lost out. And for no other reason than because she was a woman of wealth. This, in spite of the popular belief that wealth can get a long way in gaining fame and position. It may in other fields of work, but where painting or sculpture is concerned, people sternly demand the traditions of a youth of poverty.

"After the Titanic Memorial at Washington went up and my work on the two panels on the arch at Madison Square was noticed by men standing high in the opinions of the people, there came a definite change. It is the type of change that always follows public recognition. Those who formerly had been inclined to discount the work I was doing were now ready to assure me that they had always been convinced of my abilities. That, by the way, was more than I had always been convinced of. It was the kindness of the men and women who were doing things in the work of art that helped me through the dark ages.

"However, I am not sorry for the experience. There is this to be said about a popular attitude of the kind against which I was pitted—it places you with your back against the wall and brings out all the fighting qualities in you. Flagging interest is continually urged on into action by the thought that you are expected to make a failure of things. Doing the unexpected always has its power of charm."

Mrs. Whitney's exhibition in the Macdougal Alley studio consists mostly of groups and figures inspired by the war. She is said to be the only American sculptor who has given any considerable study to the part our soldiers played in the fighting.

Palestine's Klondike: Dead Sea Basin

Coal, Oil, Copper and Salt Are Found There, and Oases Are Fabulously Fertile—British Plan to Irrigate and Develop the Region

BY HAROLD J. SHEPSTONE, F. R. G. S.

EXPERTS from technical departments of the Government at Cairo are testing the reports of mineralogists and others that coal, oil, and other minerals exist in paying quantities in the Dead Sea basin, and are surveying the Jordan Valley with a view to establishing irrigation works there.

Only those who have watched the quiet efforts of the British can appreciate what they have done in developing and reorganizing this sacred land during their short occupation. One of the first tasks of their engineers was to give Jerusalem an efficient water supply. Until now the Holy City has depended entirely upon the rainfall for water. It was caught in cisterns and pools during the short rainy season and there stored until wanted. Some of these cisterns had not been cleaned out for over a hundred years and were the breeding place of deadly germs. These the British thoroughly cleansed, repaired, covered, and by means of an aqueduct brought pure water into the city from ancient reservoirs that lie to the south of Bethlehem. As a result the death rate of the city has dropped more than one-half.

Rising Up the River Arnon, the Boundary Between Ammon and Moab.

It is the opinion of irrigation experts of Cairo that much could be done in reclaiming the Jordan Valley. The river is the most important river in Palestine, and rich in Biblical associations. Prior to the coming of the British it was regarded as the property of the Sultan of Turkey and no one could sail vessels on the stream or even construct a bridge across it without his official sanction. On several occasions enterprising tourist agencies attempted to establish a steamboat service upon these waters, but all their efforts came to nought.

At only one spot, Ghoranyieh, where Christ is said to have been baptized by John the Baptist, was the river spanned by a bridge, a small wooden structure, before the war. This the Turks destroyed on their retreat. The British quickly threw a pontoon over it, replacing it by a bridge of the suspension type, which still stands. At two other places, now, however, the river is crossed by light, but strong, steel structures of the tubular type, capable of carrying heavily laden motor lorries. Thus there is now ready access to the rich plains of Moab. Now the engineers declare that by running canals from the Jordan, down which six tons of sweet water flows daily, 250,000 acres of deep, rich, alluvial soil, with a semi-tropical climate, could be reclaimed and made fruitful.

The new water supply to the Holy City, the bridging of the Jordan, reclaiming its valley, and the linking of Jerusalem with Cairo by rail—important achievements as they are—are as nothing compared to the tapping of the riches of the Dead Sea basin. Indeed, this comparatively little known region should prove a veritable treasure house of wealth, Palestine's Klondike. Coal and oil undoubtedly exist here, as well as the finest and purest of bitumen and sulphur. Then, in Byzantine times, copper mines were worked near the south end of the sea, both in horizontal galleries and vertical shafts. Marble, porphyry, and other fine classes of stone abound, as well as phosphates. Salt is obtainable in large quantities, yet under Turkish rule this commodity was actually imported from Smyrna and England.

Now that its riches are to be tapped a description of a voyage around the lake, which the writer made in a converted motor boat only a few months before the war, should prove of interest. The Dead Sea is in many aspects a strange region. Although its shores are now bleak and desolate, famous cities once stood here. It boasts of wonderful ravines, strange mountains and fertile oases.

Starting at the northern end of the sea, we skirted along the western shore, visiting Engedi, Masada, the great salt cave at Jebel Usdum, explored the wonderful gorges, and tramped over the delightful little fertile oases that dot its banks, and then up the eastern shore to our starting place. The trip was made in a very old craft, placed upon these waters by a Mohammedan. Originally a sailing vessel, she is now fitted up with a petroleum motor, which propels her from five to seven miles an hour. She is some forty-eight feet long, and can carry a load of about fifty tons. She is principally employed in carrying grain from the southern end of the sea to its northern shores. As it was our intention to make a complete circuit of the lake, we chartered the vessel for a week.

Buoyancy of the Waters of the Dead Sea.

The Dead Sea is some forty-seven miles long and about ten miles wide at its greatest breadth. Curiously enough, it lies no less than 1,300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. Many ridiculous stories are told about this sheet of water, even in Palestine itself. For instance, people will tell you in Jerusalem that it is impossible to swim in its waters, and that no animals or vegetables can exist near its shores.

As for swimming, the excessive buoyancy of the water only makes it difficult to make much headway, but swimming is both feasible and refreshing. Among the party on our vessel there were several who could not swim, yet in the evening they often ventured into the water and floated on their backs. What one has to be careful about is not to get the water into the eyes. Had Palestine belonged to any other power but Turkey, the northern shore of the lake would long ago have been a popular bathing station. No doubt the chloride of magnesia, which enters so largely into the composition of the water, would be found to have medicinal and curative properties. The water is very dense, containing 23 per cent. of solid matter, and is, bulk for bulk, heavier than the human body. How dense it is may be realised from the following:

In a ton of water from the Caspian Sea there are 11 pounds of salt; in the Baltic, 18 pounds; in the Black Sea, 26 pounds; in the Atlantic, 31 pounds; in the English Channel, 72 pounds; in the Mediterranean, 85 pounds; in the Red Sea, 93 pounds, and in the Dead Sea, 187 pounds.

It has generally been believed that this famous inland sea is decreasing in size, but the reverse is the case. Some twenty years ago there was a small island about half a mile from the north shore. This has now entirely disappeared, while on the west, east, and south shores evidences of the encroachment of the waters upon the land were noticeable in the presence of partially submerged forests of large trees still standing in the death-dealing waters.

In circumnavigating the lake, four or five fertile little plains, abundantly well watered, and capable of untold development, were discovered. They are so hot and so well watered that as soon as one crop is harvested another can be put in. It would not be necessary to wait for seasons. The choicest grapes and other fruit can be gathered several times a year. A harvest of millet can be gathered in two or three months at almost any period of the year. With the exception of the small population found in these plains, there are no towns or villages. Indeed, a more dreary and desolate region than the Dead Sea basin could hardly be imagined. Except at the points mentioned, and the small oases at Engedi, it is a dreary waste, excessively hot, and waterless.

Sailing from the northern end of the lake, Engedi, on the west side, was our first stopping place. This must have been a little paradise in the time of Solomon, and is frequently mentioned in the Old Testament. The name Engedi (the spring of the wild goat, ibex) evidently was given to it because these creatures came here for the water. It lies about half way down the western shore, and may perhaps have half a square mile of land, sloping from the upper spring, whose temperature is 80 degrees Fahr., and the small plain off the sea. It is

First Woman Magistrate Judges Fallen Sisters

Quality of Mercy Is Not Strained in Jefferson Market Court at Mrs. Norris's First Session, but Eloquence of Mere Men Is Curtailed

A LONG stream of automobiles stood outside the dingy building of the Jefferson Market Court. In the halls and corridors there was an air of excitement and expectancy, mingled with amused indulgence. New York and his wife had come to see its first woman Judge administer the law. New York was amused and his wife was excited. But Magistrate Jean H. Norris, the woman who held the centre of the stage, was neither.

The first few rows of the courtroom were filled with women. A few of them had opened the morning session with congratulatory speeches, a thing as unheard of in the annals of the court as was the occasion which prompted it. A group of fashionable women sat beaming at the proceedings in the last few rows. Their attitude manifested complete satisfaction with the woman who represented them in this high capacity.

A gruff old Italian was there with a young woman who appeared to be his daughter. A soft hat lay clutched in his lap. His shoulders slumped dejectedly. His face bore an expression of bitter disappointment. Every now and then he shook his head involuntarily in candid disapproval. The look in his eyes, about his mouth, and around his shoulders was one "What's the use of all this! What's the idea of having this woman here! What does she know about this trouble of mine! What's the use! America and American methods! Bah!"

There was no mistaking the disgusted "Bah!" at the end of it. He was not comfortable; he was not pleased; he was not happy, and, what's more, he didn't care who saw it. The attitude of the girl beside him, whose large black hat and flaming cerise blouse made her conspicuous, clutched occasionally at his sleeve to quiet his expostulations. But it didn't work.

Near the front of the room sat a group of three young men. Their hands were pushed deep into their pockets; their bodies slouched down into the bench. A court attendant passed them and nodded in recognition. He strolled over to them during a lull in the proceedings and asked in a voice that reached further than it was intended, "Here on business or interested in the feminine sex?" The word feminine was pronounced to rhyme with wine. The men grinned sheepishly. One of them answered, "Just came to see the show. Nothin' doin', though." It was true. There was nothing doing until the afternoon session.

At about 12 o'clock the court was adjourned until 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The audience slowly sauntered out of the room. In a short while nobody was left but her Honor, a few reporters, and a group of photographers. A camera was pulled to the front. The Judge smiled in a manner entirely human; in a manner that takes possession of all of us during the business of having our pictures taken. A woman attendant came over to her with a mouthful of pins and fastened the white shawl draped beneath the black robe. From behind the wall that served as a screen to her desk appeared the grinning visage of one of the old court attendants. The grin grew wider as the fussing about her Honor grew longer; there was a convulsive noise and the head disappeared.

Magistrate Jean H. Norris.

The photographers posed her Honor, courteously, smilingly; and she responded in kind. Just once, however, the strain grew too great and the fixed smile on her face relaxed. In its stead came a natural one, and a very feminine voice implored: "Please, please, don't make me look as though I were getting my death sentence." The click of the camera followed; it was over and her Honor disappeared into her chambers.

Two o'clock found an even larger gathering in the room. Just before the hands of the clock came around to the hour there was a flash and a click and the smile of the Judge faded out in smoke. Her picture was being taken once again. The smothered expostulation of a disgusted Italian was heard in the interim before the proceedings were started.

The first case called was that of two young girls charged with incorrigibility. The Judge bent over to ask the gray-haired Clerk a question. He answered her benignly, as a father might answer a favorite child. She smiled her thanks back at him and turned to the lawyers standing before her. There were two of them, and on the face of each there was a grin. Ingratiating, amused, indulgent. Entirely masculine.

Her Honor looked down upon them, in fact as well as in spirit; the lines of her mouth closed in a straight line and the smirking visages below her grew suddenly serious, as though a military order had been called out. A few words passed between her and the men. They were apologizing for being late. The dignity of the Judge again faded, and she inclined her head in gracious acceptance of the excuse.

The first witness was called. Here be it said that no gavel was used; that there was no occasion to use one. A plain clothes officer took the witness stand and began his recital. He went into details about all the aspects of the case. He used neither delicacy of thought nor reticence of expression. He finally came to the climax of the story. At that point, crude and uncultured as he appeared to be, he stopped. A slow flush suffused his face and a sheepish grin spread over his features. He wet his lips with his tongue and then blurted out the statement that he couldn't explain fully just what he said or did after that point. He looked up at the face above him. Her Honor was sitting there, quiet, unflustered. She nodded her head for him to go ahead; he and the whole court were made conscious of an air of impersonal detachment and the proceedings went ahead.

During the examination of the witness the lawyer for the girls twice demanded angrily that the question be stricken from the books. Twice the Judge, with a kindly glance toward the two girls, sustained his motion. The lawyer grew bolder. A third time he made a motion that the question of the prosecuting attorney (who, by the way, is a woman) be ruled out. His attitude was cocksure. The Judge asked to have the question repeated. It was. She looked down at the man below her, held his eye for a moment, and then, in quiet tones, called out, "Motion overruled." The words took him by surprise. He stood gaping for a few seconds, then mumbled the set formula of acquiescence.

The witness was relieved. The lawyer for the defense began a speech. Once more the face of her Honor bent over the rail. She asked that he spend no time in making a speech, but that he place the girls on the witness stand instead; that she wanted to hear their story from them alone.

In a frightened, childlike voice one of the girls said she didn't want to testify, that there was nothing she could say. The Judge heard it. She half rose out of her chair so that the girl below her could see her, and in a low voice asked her to step up. The girl did as she was told. Few in the courtroom knew that the Magistrate was speaking. Only the movement of her lips and those of the girls indicated that questions and answers were being passed. After a few minutes the girl stepped down and the second one advanced. The same apparently silent proceedings were gone through. The lawyers then summed up their cases.

With an air entirely businesslike and with no effort at playing to the gallery, her Honor quietly passed the sentence. The cases were discharged on probation. A few minutes of intermission were allowed before the next case was called.

The face of the expostulatory Italian showed a change. The slump in his attitude was gone. The concern in his expression was gone. He was interested and not a little impressed.

The second case was called. It was that of a keeper of a disorderly apartment and three young women who had been found with her. The case was serious against one of them. Again the "plain clothes" men gave their testimony and again they faltered in their description. The four women sat on chairs below the platform of the Judge facing them. The lawyers for the defense stood at the side of their clients, alert to the words that were being uttered by the detective. The situation was dramatic. Everybody in the court seemed anxious to miss nothing that was happening. And then, because her Honor was a woman, and because she was the first woman to sit on the bench in New York, came a break in the quiet of the room that was much in the nature of an anticlimax. An attendant came stalking up the aisle, importantly and officiously, carrying a box of flowers in his hand. He paused for a second in front of the desk, then veered off to the side and passed through the door leading into the Judge's chambers. A smile passed over a few faces and the tensity of the situation was broken.

Her Honor motioned to one of the clerks to open a window. He did so with an air that was sprightly in spite of his sixty-odd years. He was rewarded by a smile and returned to his desk radiant. The case was continued. The other witnesses were called. Again the Judge took a personal interest in the examination by asking questions on her own account. A few times the lawyers for the defense tried to waive a question that the Judge herself asked, but each time she turned to them briefly and with a quiet but decisive nod gave them to understand that she knew what she was doing.

At the close of the testimony the lawyer for the defendants began what promised to be a long harangue. The Judge stopped him, courteously and with a smile: "We haven't very much time," she told him, looking at the clock. "What exactly do you want?" The man was taken aback for a moment, then stated his wishes briefly. The Judge listened to him, sat in contemplation for a moment, and then in a voice that very few could hear gave her decision.

Three of the women who had been arrested were dismissed. The one against whom the charges were plainly serious was found guilty and held for sentence, much to the disgust of the "plain clothes" men and much to the satisfaction of the audience.

The last case called was that of a negro girl of 16, who had been arrested for petty larceny. The Judge looked down at her, caught the half-vacant expression of the apparently subnormal mind, and asked a question pertinent to the case. "Has the girl any parents?" She had. The Judge instructed that they be summoned. Her closing words were: "Get a special delivery stamp upstairs."

The court was adjourned. The audience left the room. The last one to go was an Italian, who was anxious to get a final glimpse of her Honor.

Taste! Ah— one of life's delights

Out in Nature's sun-swept garden where choicest fruits and blossoms ripen and grow, Belle Mead went to school and learned from Nature the secrets of flavor. That is why Belle Mead Sweets make you think of the lusciousness of fruits and of the fragrance of flowers.

Each dainty sweet of the Belle Mead Gold Seal Assortment gives a satisfaction far beyond the power of sugar alone to satisfy. Each is packed full to overflowing with Nature's choicest ingredients lusciously seasoned and flavored. In some, you'll find a mellow trace of clover-bloom honey, recalling sunny, summer fields; in others, a touch of maple syrup, recalling fragrant spring blossoms. These delights and many others lie in wait for you. Ask for the Gold Seal Assortment.

Look today for the dealer in your neighborhood who sells Belle Mead Sweets. If you cannot find him, ask us to send you his name and address from Trenton, New Jersey.

Bags that the Mode Approves

IT is a new departure for Ovington's to show a selection of bags, a departure justified only by the bags themselves.

For at "The Gift Shop of Fifth Avenue" you will now find an unusual array of bags—tailored bags done in delicate chiffon velvet; bags in brilliant combinations of gleaming beads; still others more softly toned; leather bags in many shapes and sizes—in fact, every kind of bag that fashion is smiling upon to-day.

And the prices are, as Ovington's prices have always been, reasonable and modest.

Your Complexion tells a story to the World

HOW fearlessly, how confidently, the girl with a fresh, soft, lovely skin meets the eyes of the world! Nothing to conceal! For almost always a clear, radiant complexion is an indication of a buoyant, well poised nature, healthful living, and fastidious habits.

Nothing so quickly creates an impression of your personality as your skin. By keeping it soft, clear, radiant —you can make it speak instantly, unmistakably, of fastidious freshness and charm, of dainty care.

Don't let your skin tell a story of neglect—of unhygienic or thoughtless habits. Even if through the wrong kind of treatment your complexion has lost the smoothness and freshness it should have—if it has become pale and sallow —if it is spoiled by disfiguring little blackheads—you can give it back the color and clearness that make other girls' complexions so attractive.

For your skin is constantly changing —it changes every day in spite of you. Each day old skin dies and new skin takes its place. And you will find that this new skin, if given the care its particular need demands, will respond instantly and gratifyingly.

Perhaps you long for more color. Your skin has always looked so pale and sallow beside that of other girls! This condition of your skin tells clearly that it is not doing its work properly. The tiny bloodvessels have become inactive—the pores are not working freely enough.

The new steam treatment for pale, sallow skins

Even if your skin has suffered from this condition for some time—you can correct it. By stimulating the inactive bloodvessels—thoroughly cleansing the pores—you can give the new skin, as it forms, life and color.

One or two nights a week fill your washbowl full of hot water—almost boiling hot. Bend over the top of the bowl and cover your head and the bowl with a heavy bath towel, so that no steam can escape. Steam your face for thirty seconds.

Now lather a hot cloth with Woodbury's Facial Soap. With this wash your face thoroughly, rubbing the lather well into the skin with an upward and outward motion. Then rinse the skin well, first with warm water, then with cold, and finish by rubbing for thirty seconds with a piece of ice.

The other nights of the week, cleanse your face thoroughly, in the Woodbury way, with Woodbury's Facial Soap and warm water, finishing with cold.

If you carry out this treatment with careful attention to each detail, you will be surprised, delighted, at the change it will make in your appearance. Your skin will gradually take on the soft color, the freshness it should have.

Blackheads are a confession

Perhaps you feel at a disadvantage in meeting people because your skin is constantly marred by disfiguring blackheads. Blackheads are a confession that you are using the wrong kind of cleansing for your type of skin. Oil and foreign matter have solidified in the pores—and if neglected, this condition may lead to serious irritation. The only way in which you can guard against blackheads is to keep the pores exquisitely clean and sufficiently stimulated to do their work thoroughly and carry away any waste matter before it hardens.

Every night use this treatment and see how easily you can keep your skin free from this trouble.

Apply hot cloths to the face until the skin is reddened. Then with a rough washcloth, work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the pores thoroughly—always with an upward and outward motion. Rinse with clear hot water, then with cold—the colder the better. If possible, rub your face for thirty seconds with a lump of ice. Dry carefully. To remove the blackheads already formed substitute a flesh brush for the washcloth in the treatment given above. Then protect the fingers with a handkerchief and press out the blackheads.

After using this treatment regularly for a few weeks, you will be surprised to see how your skin has improved—how much clearer, more attractive it has become.

Each one of the famous Woodbury treatments is worked out with reference to the special needs of different types of skin. By giving a few minutes every day to the special treatment your skin demands—you can make it tell of health and dainty care.

The booklet containing full directions for all the famous Woodbury treatments is wrapped around each cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap. Get a cake today—begin your special treatment tonight. Woodbury's Facial Soap is on sale at any drug store or toilet goods counter in the United States or Canada. A 25 cent cake lasts a month or six weeks.

Would you like us to send you a trial size cake?

For six cents we will send you a trial size cake (enough for a week of any Woodbury facial treatment), together with the booklet of treatments. Or for 15 cents we will send you the treatment booklet and samples of Woodbury's Facial Soap, Facial Powder, Facial Cream and Cold Cream. Address the Andrew Jergens Company, 9907 Spring Grove Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio.

If you live in Canada, address the Andrew Jergens Co., Limited, 9907 Sherbrooke St., Perth, Ontario.

–Hungry all over again

Creamy milk chocolate with the real Swiss flavor

THE delicious flavor of sweet, fresh milk, of crisp, fragrant chocolate, creamed together in the true Swiss fashion! The very thought of it makes you hungry—how empty you do feel as you come out of the theatre!

Now is the time to try Peter's. Stop on your way home and get some. You will say you never tasted any half as delicious.

It is skillful blending that gives Peter's its inimitable flavor. From Brazil, from the Indies, come the five kinds of cacao beans used—each is selected because just that variety is needed to make the smooth, delicate chocolate that is Peter's.

Milk, pure, fresh, heavy with cream—that is the kind that goes into Peter's. Used immediately after it is produced, it adds to the chocolate the taste of its own fresh deliciousness.

Up in the Oswego Valley you will find the American kitchens where Peter's is made. There the chocolate is creamed with the milk in the true Swiss fashion invented by Daniel Peter—milk chocolate made with the inimitable, delicate flavor.

Eat Peter's tonight before you go to bed. Try it the next time you go to the theatre and come away "starved."

You can get Peter's Milk Chocolate,—plain and almond bars,—at any drug or grocery store, at news-stands and at candy shops.

Peter's Almond Bar—have you tried it? You cannot help liking its crunchy-crisp goodness

THE WORLD'S GREAT SATELLITE AT CLOSER RANGE THAN EVER BEFORE SEEN BY THE EYES OF MEN.

This remarkable photograph was made by the new Hooker telescope of the Mount Wilson Observatory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, just installed, and was the first taken after the telescope went into commission. The picture in detail and definition is superior to any hitherto made. The mirror of the telescope, the largest yet constructed, is 100 inches in diameter. The scale of the illustration is about fifty miles to the inch, or a little less than four feet to the moon's diameter. The mountains above and to the left are the lunar Apennines; those on the left just below the centre are the Alps. Both ranges include many peaks from 15,000 to 20,000 feet in height. The ring-like formations are the so-called craters, most of them far larger than anything similar on the earth. In the upper right corner is Copernicus, about fifty miles in diameter. The largest of the conspicuous group of three just below the Apennines is Archimedes, and at the lower end of the Alps is Plato. Attention is called to the long sunset shadows cast by the isolated peaks on the left, and the shadows cast within the craters by the crater shells can be plainly seen. The central portion of the picture is a vast plain, the Mare Imbrium.

ELKHORN CHEESE
8 VARIETIES IN TINS

"Milk is all food but the water. Cheese is milk with the water taken out"

SO it is easy to see why cheese is such a nourishing diet. But it must be pure, fresh, free from taint, free from storing or shipping abuses. ELKHORN CHEESE in Tins is all of these—and more! We wish you could see how perfectly sanitary is our process of manufacture. From the inspected milk of selected herds to the final sterilizing, filling and sealing in parchment lined tins—

"The First Hands To Touch It Are Yours"

ELKHORN CHEESE is not only wholesome and digestible of itself but it helps in the digestion of other foods—an aid to complete assimilation of all that goes with it. This is because of the exclusive Kraft process of sterilization that makes ELKHORN CHEESE "like you." Always clean and pure; no rind, no waste. If you like cheese you will "love" ELKHORN.

Try This "MACARONI SUPREME"
More delicious than any you've ever before tasted! Richer, more "meaty" and nourishing! Supremely appetizing.

Remove Elkhorn Cheese (American Kraft) from tin, mash with a fork and heat, adding a little milk. Mix thoroughly with boiled macaroni, turn into a buttered dish, cover with cracker crumbs, dot with butter and bake.

La-May Face Powder Is Harmless to the Most Delicate Skin

A specialist has at last perfected a pure face powder that positively will not cause enlarged pores, blackheads and irritations. In fact, while it is considered the best face powder, it is also a remedy for complexion troubles. It is guaranteed pure and harmless to the most delicate baby skin. It beautifies wonderfully because it helps to clear and lighten the skin and protect the complexion from blemishes. This new kind of face powder is made largely of an ingredient that skin specialists use in the treatment of the complexion. And it really stays on better than any other face powder. Of course, saying this, every one knows we mean the famous La-may Powder (French, Poudre L'Amé). This is the powder that does not contain starchy rice powder or dangerous white lead to make it adhere. White lead is a deadly poison and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that makes enlarged pores, blackheads and rice powder irritations. Because La-may is so pure and because it stays on so well it is now used by over a million American women. All dealers carry the large box, and many dealers also carry the small trial size. Be sure to try La-may. Then you will really know a perfect face powder. You will be sorry if you take a substitute. When you use this harmless powder and see how beautifully it improves your complexion, you will understand why La-may so quickly became the most popular beauty powder sold in America. Save this notice.

Why she Failed to Pass the Test of Critical Eyes

A DOZEN TIMES A DAY SOME LITTLE UNCONSCIOUS MOVEMENT OF THE HANDS BETRAYS YOU

Gently push back the cuticle with the end of an orange stick wrapped in cotton and moistened with Cutex. Wash the hands. The surplus cuticle will disappear leaving a firm, slender nail base.

CAREFULLY gowned, pretty, attractive—yet she failed to pass the test of the other woman's scrutiny. In the one small index to good breeding that never escapes the eyes of a critical person, the girl was deficient. Her hands were not well groomed.

How often, without our knowledge, each one of us is judged by this test!

A well-known social leader said, "I can overlook shabby clothes, but ragged looking nails and cuticle are something that I cannot forgive anyone. They prove a lack of personal fastidiousness which simply means vulgarity to me."

Yet most of us have learned from sad experience how impossible it is to keep our nails well groomed by the old-fashioned cuticle cutting method. The cuticle only seems to grow up faster, to get thicker and rougher.

It is easy, though, by the Cutex method to keep your nails always charming.

Regularly, once or twice a week, give yourself a Cutex manicure. You will never again be embarrassed when you feel eyes upon your hands.

Cutex, the cuticle remover, comes in 35c and 65c bottles. Cutex Nail White, Cold Cream and Nail Polish are each 35c.

The Field of Dishonor

She had never seen a highwayman before. This one had on army officer's boots and the manners of a gentleman. She laughed and told him so.

But it was serious business for him. He faced death, prison, disgrace.

It is a story so startling and curious, with its tangle of romance and adventure—with its daring, thrilling climax—that it could only be told by that master of romance—

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

(First Uniform Edition)

The sharp crack of a rifle—the softness of a woman's arm in the moonlight, the swish of tropic waters against the steamer's side—he has got them all in his stories. This is the man who said "Romance is not dead!" This is the man who went to Mexico, to Africa, to South America, to England, to Japan—all over the world searching for adventures and romances, and he found them. No other man ever knew so many kinds of life when it is gayest, when it is fullest of excitement, as Richard Harding Davis. When a man has seen two wars, a Queen's Jubilee, an Inauguration, and the Coronation of a Czar—all in one year—he has some thrilling stories to tell.

Booth Tarkington
5 Volumes

OUR foremost living American novelist today is Booth Tarkington. Tarkington hears the very heart-beats of the American people. He is simple—direct—startlingly real. His humor is not the humor of the burlesque, but of that finer, bigger kind—with a deep, underlying purpose.

Booth Tarkington knows how to write about love. Nowhere else can you find romance so delightful—so enthralling.

What They Think of Davis

"His heart flamed against cruelty and injustice."—Theodore Roosevelt.

"He was youth incarnate."—John Fox, Jr.

"He was a national figure at twenty-three. He knew how before he began."—Booth Tarkington.

"As a writer his place is assured."—Irvin S. Cobb.

"No one ever saw more wars in so many different places or got more out of them."—Charles Dana Gibson.

"He probably knew more waiters, generals, actors, and princes than any man who ever lived."—F. P. Dunne.

George Ade says: "I cannot tell you how much joy I have derived from 'Penrod.' I think Tarkington has got more under the hide of the real boy, that is deeper into the psychology of juvenile deveitry, than any one who has written boy stuff in our generation."

"The picture of a young girl painted by Booth Tarkington in 'The Flirt' will be recognized as being truthful in every community in the United States, for it is by no means peculiar to the Indiana town that serves for its setting."—New York Sun.

Because of his closeness to real American life, Columbia University's $1,000 prize for the best novel of 1918 went to Booth Tarkington for "The Magnificent Ambersons."

WARTIME FICTION BY HICHENS AND MAXWELL

Problem of Life After Death the Theme of "Mrs. Marden"—Latest Novels and Short Stories by Joseph Hergesheimer, Mary S. Andrews, W. E. Norris and Others

MRS. MARDEN. By Robert Hichens. George H. Doran Company.

MR. HICHENS has written a remarkable book in "Mrs. Marden." It is a book with few characters, with practically nothing that can be called a plot, yet it fascinates and holds you from the first page. It is really one of those books which you can hardly be persuaded to lay down unfinished.

Partly this is because of the masterly style in which it is written. The current of the story moves swiftly, smoothly, simply, the developing character of the central figure being expressed with an art so sure and fine that you are unconscious of the fact that there is art—the whole thing becomes reality while you read; it is only when you have ended that you remember the artist. Every person in the story is singularly alive! The descriptive passages are of the briefest, but they tell with the force of actual contact. There seems to be no effort in the writing, as there is none in the reading. The book has a passionate quality. It has been deeply felt by its author. It is this quality that gives it its movement, like a great wave of the sea, cohesive, irresistible, carrying you with it by the sheer force of its own integrity and belief.

The story, if one may call it that, concerns itself with a woman of fashion in London, a widow with an only son. She and this boy, a young Guardsman, are the best of comrades, leading a jolly, frivolous life, having "a similar taste for gaiety and all the good things of life, a similar distaste for serious thought and for what they called 'the solemnities.' * * * Both were butterflies. Both energetically lived for the day, and both thoroughly enjoyed their light and successful existences."

But the great war comes, and Ronald goes to France. We get nothing more than a glimpse of him, a laughing glimpse, as he bids his mother good-bye, telling her with absolute conviction that she needn't be afraid, he "feels it in his bones" he'll come through all right. He is off, and the story begins!

His mother, though she sees him off bravely, and without tears, felt "horrible" after he had gone. The old life ceased to interest her, fatigued her. She wanted something "to hang on to." But there was nothing she could do.

However, she follows the line of least resistance and becomes a valuable aid in raising money for war charities by taking charge of the program sellers at the endless charity matinées that flood London. It is something she can do well. The work consisted of getting a smart new frock and hat for each matinée, looking charming, wheedling money out of the audiences, and spurring on the pretty young society women who took the part of program sellers into wheedling a lot more. It was wonderfully successful and interesting, she felt herself to be doing her bit, and was extremely content. As time went on and her son escaped even a scratch she began to think there was something in his feeling that he bore a charmed life, as he continued to write her. War, after all, wasn't such a bad thing.

And then, and very soon, after only a few pages, Mrs. Marden's life as a butterfly ceases. Ceases instantaneously, with the telegram that comes telling her her son is dead.

The rest of the book relates how she met this fact; how, in her agony of grief that grows and grows as the days pass, she tries to find something that will console or at least help her. With a large number of her class she takes up spiritualism.

Her reactions to this experience are related with subtlety and insight. The spiritualist himself is a telling figure. Mrs. Marden is not one of the women who rush eagerly into belief. She does not go at first of her own free will, but to please a friend. Much of what she sees and hears disgusts and tries her. Yet there is something that attracts, and she continues to attend "sittings," hoping to believe. The idea that she might perhaps get proof that Ronald continues to exist, that he is not simply a little heap of decaying bones in France, gone from the world and from any form of life forever—this idea, this hope, presses her on. She had gone, soon after war broke, to church, thinking that perhaps there was something there for her. But neither the service, with its ritual and its somewhat banal hymns, nor the preacher's talk, with its commonplaces and its rhetoric, impressed her as either useful or interesting. She wasn't sure what she wanted. But it wasn't this.

Although there is not a plot, yet there is a tenseness to the book that must not be applied to readers by any further telling of the course of Mrs. Marden's spiritual, emotional and intellectual experiences. She is a broken-hearted woman, one of many thousands to be sure, but individual none the less. Everything that made life worth living is over, and she has no belief in anything beyond life.

She must struggle toward belief. That is the impelling thing. Here she is in a world that matters nothing to her, and without a future. Without a hope of meeting her son again, with nothing before her but finis. She wants more.

But she doesn't want intermediaries, other people's ideas or suggestions. She must feel herself what is the truth, grasp it from within, not have it imparted from without. What she arrives at and how she arrives at it is the story.

It is told very largely in dialogue, and no one has written better dialogue than Mr. Hichens in this book. It appears to be talk like that of people as you hear it and speak it in ordinary life. It is, of course, more than that—it is talk transmuted by the artist, made perfect for his purpose, completing and intensifying the truth of his picture, as a painter uses foreshortening to translate his subject's gestures.

PROFESSOR C. ALPHONSO SMITH COMPILES A DICTIONARY OF TEMPORARY WORDS OF TODAY

By BRANDER MATTHEWS

NEW WORDS SELF-DEFINED. By C. Alphonso Smith. 215 pages. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co.

PROFESSOR C. ALPHONSO SMITH, the head of the English department in the Naval Academy at Annapolis and the biographer of O. Henry, has prepared a little volume that O. Henry would have delighted in, because it deals with words, as to which he was keenly sensitive, and because it is absolutely up to the very latest minute, as to which he himself was ever ambitious. Professor Smith tells us in his preface that his book is "both less and more than a dictionary. It is less than a dictionary in containing not one formal definition; it is more than a dictionary in its attempt to quote only such sentences as make the meaning of each word stand self-revealed." That is to say, he has here compiled a word list of the linguistic novelties of the past half decade, the five years of the war which caused the creation of a heterogeny of novel locutions, some of them entirely new words and some of them old words charged with new meanings.

He has done something which, so far as I know, has never been done before—at least I do not find on the five-foot shelf which shelters my books about the English language anything exactly like Professor Smith's glossary. The novelty of his enterprise lies, first of all, in the fact that he has chosen to deal only with the most recent candidates for admission to the vocabulary, the neologisms which are still on probation, so to speak; and, secondly, in his diligence in collecting illustrative quotations which, as he himself puts it, "make the meaning of each word stand self-revealed."

For example, he borrows from Will Irwin, writing in 1917, that "there's a new word in the English language—and, by that I mean the corrupt dialect of our mother tongue used in the British Isles, not the pure and yet improved variety current in North America. * * * Camouflage—the term was pretty nearly unknown, even to the French, three years ago; and the thing it represents was absolutely unknown. * * * The British soldiers * * * use it for any variety of concealment—moral, spiritual, or intellectual." And Professor Smith gives a cross reference to "dazzle painting," although he omits to tell us that "camouflage" is in reality only a new term for an old thing—for what the faunal naturalists long ago discussed as "protective coloring," a far better term, all things considered.

Under "hyphenate" Professor Smith quotes Colonel Roosevelt's assertion that "camps like this [that at Plattsburg] are the best possible antidotes to hyphenated Americanism." Under "shock troops," we find a quotation from a school history to the effect that "shock-troops, composed of selected men from all divisions of the army, were to advance, after the bombardment, in a series of waves." Under "sausage" there is an extract from one of the innumerable war books, telling us that an American aviator "became obsessed with the idea of bringing down a German sausage, as observation balloons are called." And under "gotha" there is an apt couplet from Punch in October, 1917:

Though overhead the gothas buss
Stands London where it did? It does.

"Gotha" is German, so is "fokker," and so are half a dozen of the other words which Professor Smith has brought together in this book; they are captives from the language of the enemy. But many more are taken from the tongue of our ancient ally, France—"avion," "boche," "barrage," "liaison," "mussif," "poilu," "vrille," to cite only a few of them. And it is only natural that we should adopt, if only temporarily, the terms which the French have devised because the art of war is one of the many arts in which they have been leaders. Their original primacy in the art of war is proved by the French origin of nearly all the English words which deal with military affairs. As Dr. Henry Bradley has pointed out in his illuminating little book on the "Making of English," "war" itself is a Norman French word, one of a host of French words belonging to the same department "which became English before the end of the thirteenth century," and he catalogues among these loan words, "battle," "assault," "siege," "standard," "banner," "armor," "lance," "fortress," and "tower."

It is not without significance that English took over from French two essential series of military words; one of these is that designating the rank of the officers—"Corporal," "Sergeant," "Lieutenant," (strangely mispronounced by the British "Leftenant,") "Captain," "Major," "Adjutant," "Colonel," "General," and "Marshal." The other series is necessarily used to differentiate the several subordinate parts of an army, "company," "battalion," "regiment," "brigade," "division," and "corps." It is added testimony to the martial initiative of the French that these words of warfare have been taken over into the German language as well as into English. I am inclined to think that it would have been better for the Germans if they had not devised a native word to describe the chief-tainship of the German Emperor, if they had not called him the "War Lord," but had been content to entitle him (as the President of the United States is entitled) the "Commander in Chief." The German "War Lord" seemed somehow to be aggressive, as if it contained a veiled threat, whereas the American "Commander in Chief" is merely descriptive.

Many of the French words and phrases which Professor Smith has here arranged in alphabetical order are frankly French and have no hope of ever becoming English. It is useful to explain to American readers, innocent of any foreign tongue, what may be the meaning of "alerte," "avion," "cafard," "camion," "chef de bataillon," "copain," "dégommer," "embusqué," "escadrille," "filleul," "foyer du soldat," "glissade," "marraine," "pinard," "poste de secours," "revanche," and "torpillage." But "camion," for example, is simply the French for "truck," and "poste de secours" is simply the French for "first aid station." Neither of these words is needed in English; and for this reason, if for no other, there is no likelihood that either of them will continue to appear, even in the newspapers now that our army has been brought back from France. A word from a foreign tongue is rarely taken over into English unless there is a pretty good reason to believe that it can perform a useful function in our language.

We may go so far as to doubt whether "boche" will very long survive the signing of the treaty of peace; and we may venture a guess that "camouflage" will slowly surrender its vogue, just as "fin de siècle" did a score of years ago. Perhaps the overworked "poilu" will also retire into innocuous desuetude. But "barrage" is likely to maintain itself in English, and if it does it will assuredly become English in pronunciation, rhyming thereafter to "marriage." So "liaison" has a chance of survival, and so perhaps has "vrille"—although it is more than probable that our American aviators will sooner or later spontaneously evolve a word of their own, more in accord with our speech habits. "Ace" as applied to an aviator who has been victor in five aerial duels, has a fair chance of survival, because it is an English word of honorable pedigree, which has taken over from the French only a new and special meaning.

In Dr. Bradley's invaluable little volume (from which one quotation has already been made) we are told that English writers in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries "felt themselves at liberty to introduce a French word whenever they pleased. Many [of these French words] which supplied no permanent need of the language have long been obsolete." They were truly loan words, borrowed only for a little season, and in the end relinquished to their original owner. They were like the Italian laborers who come over here to work for a few years and then return to their native land, having made no attempt to acquire American citizenship.

I am old enough to recall readily the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, and in the letters from the front we used to read about the "mitrailleuse" and the "francs-tireurs" of the French, and about the "landwehr" and the "zundadelgewehr" of the Germans. "Mitrailleuse" was what the French then called their adaptation of the Gatling; and it was an early form of what we now call a machine gun. The "zundadelgewehr," the "needlegun," was soon superseded by a better weapon; tion. His "The Devil's Garden" was a book that, read, is remembered. A murder story where the interest was not in the murder, but in the effect it had on the character of the murderer. A story full of human sympathy and insight, told with mastery.

Mr. Maxwell was at the front during the fighting and had no time for the telling of stories. But the stories were there, and now we have them, or some few of them. In this welcome book with its expressive title, the little of a man who has been there and done and seen, and for whom, indeed, life can never be the same again. A title not without its touch of irony, however. For to some the war meant little but an added flare of excitement, a means of satisfying an uneasy egotism—and these are not passed over quite in silence—they find a place in the stories, as they held it in life. "What Edie Regretted," for instance, has a knife edge for all its easy good temper. And Edie is one of a rather large crowd.

But most of the stories are laid in France, where the drama needs no ironic touches. Telling pictures they give. There is "The Château," one of many. Taken over after centuries of existence under one family, who loved each stone, each bleached tree, each quiet custom, by war. English soldiers in the ancient village, English officers in the ancient château. The old Count and Countess can find no trouble too great for these allies of theirs. They give over room after room, squeeze themselves smaller and smaller; finally they move away altogether, leaving the castle in charge of caretakers, with orders that all that may be done for the comfort of these honored guests shall be done.

But the caretakers are another breed. They see their way to graft, and graft they do. Mean of soul and surly of spirit, they kill the fair fame of the château, make it a by-word for extortion, for illnatured and bad service. For thieving, too. The man used to be a gamekeeper, and he cannot forego the delight of stealing a firearm of whatever kind when opportunity offers. He hides them in a closet. And both of the pair browbeat and exploit the English at every chance.

But the tide turns. With 1918 comes the great German advance, and presently the English have all gone—and a little later there are Germans in the château court, Germans in the woman's kitchen.

And later still, because the boches found the hoarded rifles and revolvers, there are two dead under the wall, by the little fountain with its Cupid, that has been overthrown, being in the way of the firing squad. The woman, because she screamed and struggled, had been bound and gagged upright; the man lay at her feet.

The château of France have seen strange things since the war, and the villages, too. There is the story called "A German in the Village." A tragic story, perhaps a shocking story. But the reader will agree with the doctor, that things ended for the best. One cannot have a German in the village.

These stories all have their drama, as stories should. But it is the pictures they give of the French during the war, of the soldiers at their daily incredible job, of the thoughts and the reactions of that terrible period which touch the reader more nearly. There is so strong an atmosphere of actuality, the details are sketched in so surely, with few strokes, each where it belongs, that the effect is life itself. And then the women! Mr. Maxwell has a neat hand with women. Take the heroine of "The Widow," as an indication. Cautious, canny, on the lookout for number three, and finding the going a bit difficult because the war has created such a shortage of men and such an overplus of war widows—she wasn't one of them—Mrs. Burt, as she tells her maid, was simply swept off her feet by the strong, the masterful officer who picked her up so unconventionally in Brighton. As it turned out later he had an unconventional way of picking up money, too. But with what kindly humor Mr. Maxwell reveals Mrs. Burt to us, shows up the eternal feminine in her, the aching romantic yearning within that self-seeking, sleek outside.

A readable, worth-while, interesting book, every page of it; a human book through which beats the pulse of war, heightening the elements of character, intensifying the situations. A book you will enjoy reading.

JOY IN THE MORNING

JOY IN THE MORNING. By Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

IN "The Perfect Tribute" Mrs. Andrews achieved a definite success in the recovery of the inherent pathos of a familiar historic episode. She added invention to fact with a skill which justified her handling of one of the most dramatic incidents of our national history.

"Joy in the Morning," a collection of short stories of the Great War, fails to meet this level of accomplishment. There are nine stories and one dramatic dialogue. While they do carry traces of the genuine emotion which flowed under and through and about the war, not one of them is so cleanly made, so inevitable, so intense, as to be a really notable contribution to the legend of the struggle.

"The Ditch," the dramatic dialogue which is given the place of honor, attempts to convey the deeper implications of the war by a series of conversations at an American trench in France. It is not very successful; it is talky, artificial, propagandist. Its prophecy of a cleaner, kindlier world is a welcome one, but it is impossible to load a thread of pathos and patriotic emotion with little chunks of argument about preparedness and General Staffs and the like without making it sag badly. There is a touch of capable satire in the talk of the American flappers who visit the trench a century after the war and think only of trimming hats:

> Teacher (wearily.)—Please pay attention. This is one of the world's most sacred spots. It is the scene of a great heroism. It is the place where many of our fellow-countrymen laid down their lives. How can you stand on this solemn ground and chatter about hats?
> Third Schoolgirl.—Well, you see, Miss Hadley, we're fed up with solemn grounds. You can't expect us to go into raptures at this stage over an old ditch. And, to be serious, wouldn't some of these field flowers make a lovely combination for hats? With the French touch, don't you know? You'd be darling in one—so ingénue.

One is sure that Mrs. Andrews did not mean the satire to outweigh the serious message of the little play, but it comes near to doing just that.

One or two of the other stories share a curious plan: they depend for effect upon the heaping up of one incident on another of the same kind. Mrs. Andrews drives her plots in tandem instead of in team. Her coincidences, furthermore, are too frequent and too much overworked. It is permissible to have one French-Canadian guide achieve war-glory and come home to encounter his own Colonel in the North Woods, but when almost the same device is presented in another story it fails to convince.

Yet the substance of the stories, for the most part, is much better than their construction. There are three that depend on the supernatural; of these the best tells the story of a Canadian peasant whose forefather served the Maid of Orleans and was rewarded with the gift of a silver stirrup. The heroic incidents scattered through the stories are spirited. One of them, the exploit of Hirondelle, who was own brother to Sergeant York in valor and wit, is delicious. There is genuine feeling in several of the encounters which Mrs. Andrews brings about in such devious ways.

The study of the cowardly Aristophe who became a hero under the spur of personal loyalty is a vivid bit of war-psychology. Incidentally, this same story, "The V. C.," contains an admirable little sketch of a frog hunt in the northern lakes.

In the immeasurable mass of sorrow and joy which the fortunes of war brought even to Americans there will be abundant response to the simple strains of pathos on which Mrs. Andrews rings the changes in these stories. Though they fall short of enduring merit, they will be read, for the time being, with genuine pleasure.

LINDA CONDON

LINDA CONDON. By Joseph Hergesheimer. Alfred A. Knopf.

TO draw the picture of a woman whose real interest in life is a complete and unswerving devotion to her own beauty, and to do it in such a way that this same woman not only wins but holds the reader's sympathy, is no small accomplishment. Mr. Hergesheimer's success in this very far from easy task is in great measure due, we believe, to the fact that he shows us Linda Condon as a child of lovely possibilities twisted out of shape by circumstances utterly beyond her power to alter or even to evade. Later, he retains sympathy for her by eliminating from her all, or nearly all, self-satisfaction. Linda, the woman, though she worships her beautiful body, is never in the least pleased with her character, but is discontented with herself, regarding herself as deficient, almost culpably and most regrettably incapable of the sympathies and the emotions which she wants and believes she ought to feel. Primarily, the novel is a study of that ideal love, "the old gesture towards the stars," a reaching after perfection, which, though

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

ALAN THYLBY.—There was published in New York in 1846 a book entitled "Hochelaga; or, England in the New World," edited by Eliot Warburton. Any information about the editor of the author would be much appreciated.

The author of "Hochelaga; or, England in the New World," was Major George Drought Warburton of Wicklow, Ireland, born 1810, died 1857. His brother, Bartholomew Elliott George, usually known as "Eliot Warburton," was the editor. In July, 1844, Major Warburton embarked from Chatham for Canada, and wrote the description of the dominion, under its ancient vernacular name of "Hochelaga." The work was published anonymously in 1846 in two volumes, and the fifth edition came out in 1854. It was also printed in New York. Major Warburton returned from Canada in 1846. He wrote "The Conquest of Canada," another anonymous work, dated 1850, and the "Memoirs of Charles Merdaunt, Earl of Peterborough and Monmouth," 1853. In 1854 he retired from the army as Major on full pay. In 1857 he was elected to Parliament for Harwich. In a fit of temporary insanity he shot and killed himself. His brother Elliott, a miscellaneous writer, perished in the burning of the steamer Amazon at sea on Jan. 4, 1852.

The Spectator

EDWARD P. EGGLESTON.—Can you give me the approximate value of "The Spectator, with sketches of the lives of the authors and explanatory notes," in eight volumes, London: Printed for the Booksellers, 1797 ?

The Spectator, with The Tatler and Guardian, London, 1797, 14 volumes, large paper copies, has brought at auction from $14 to $25. We find no record of the sale of The Spectator by itself.

"Our Indian Summer"

JUSTINE HAYARD IRVING.—The lines asked for by Ella J. Smith,

There are meanidoes of Autumn when Summer returns,
Though the leaves are all garnered and sealed in their urns, will be found in the third verse of "Our Indian Summer," by Oliver Wendell Holmes. It was written in 1856, and was one of the many poems Holmes loved to write for the anniversaries of "The Class of '29."

APPEALS TO READERS

D. N.—Can any one tell me the second and third verses of an old French song for children? The first verse begins:

Hier au sortant de l'école,
Mon cousin toujours frivole,
Monsieur pres du moulin
Jouir dans le dos voisin.

It is called "Les Cerises du Voisin."

Also the words of another child's song called "Le Mariage des Oiseaux."

Have these songs ever been published?

"Neuve Chapelle"

M. M. H.—Will some reader kindly furnish the poem entitled "Neuve Chapelle," which was written by a Sergeant in a Scotch regiment after the conflict at that place?

"Wilt Go With Me?"

A. J. MARKS.—Will some reader kindly tell me the author of and furnish the concluding lines of a poem commencing:

Wilt go with me, Cathelia?
The morn is all aglow.

I think it appeared many years ago in Graham's Magazine.

"The Christ Face"

J. M. C.—Can any of your readers tell me the author of the poem entitled "The Christ Face," and when it was written? The first stanza is as follows:

Does He yet mourn? The world from Him estranged?
Wanders afar and will not walk His way.
A patient One, O weary, watching Christ,
Are the tears wet upon Thy face today?

There are five four-line stanzas in the poem.

FIRST AID TO AUTHORS

You are a writer. You send your work to publishers and it is returned to you. You don't know what is wrong with it and the publishers won't tell you. It may go unsold just for lack of expert advice.

I am a publishers' reader. For years I read for Macmillan, then for Doran, and then I became consulting specialist to them and to Holt, Stokes, Lippincott and others, most of whom still send to me for literary advice and expert editing.

Send me your MSS. I will criticise them frankly from the publisher's point of view and advise you how best to market them. My fee is $10.00 for anything of book length or less, and must be sent at the same time. If I think editing worth while I will give you an estimate, based on the time required.

ity to inspire corresponding feeling in return. In consequence, from her childhood until her death she is constantly being hurt, defeated, made to feel that there is no place, no purpose for her in the world. The repression and rigidity that seem to have characterized English life down to the end of the last century are vividly portrayed in the depiction of the childhood and growth of Alex Clare and her brothers and sisters. In common with nearly all English novels that bring in children and their relation to their parents, "Consequences" inspires and nourishes the conviction that English boys and girls must be the most disagreeable brats in the world and their fathers and mothers the most unfeeling, uninterested, unsympathetic and cold-hearted parents to be found anywhere—a conviction that actual acquaintance never bears out.

It is a brilliantly and convincingly painted panorama of the life and growth of one family, with Alex, the oldest child, always in the foreground, that Miss Delafield gives us, but one cannot repress the wondering question if even Victorian days ever produced just such a family. One feels very skeptical also as to the truth to life of the earnest young egotist who wants Alex Claire to marry him and during their engagement of several weeks never more than coldly brushes her cheek with his lips, and that but once. One strongly suspects him of being thus caricatured for the sake of emphasizing Alex's inability to inspire feeling, as, in short, a necessity of the scheme of the story. Alex finally tries to find an outlet for her emotional nature in a convent, chiefly because the Mother Superior has won for the moment her wandering and unrequited affections. But there, too, after the lapse of some years, she finds disappointment and defeat.

The book has its social and psychological implications in its suggestion for the thoughtful reader of the tremendous waste of human energy in such a society as that portrayed. One feels that it was largely from such neurotic, defeated womanhood, chafing against its uselessness, as is represented in Alex Clare, that the militant suffragists recruited their explosive forces in the years before the war. It must be said of Miss Delafield that she employs the English language frequently without appreciation of its niceties of meaning, as when, for instance, she uses "infinitely," that adverb of limitless significance, for all manner of petty and commonplace purposes, as, "infinitely better cooked food."

"OPEN SESAME!"

"OPEN SESAME!" And Other Stories. By Mrs. Baillie Reynolds. New York: George H. Doran Company.

PEOPLE who do not ask very much of a story except that it be "romantic" will enjoy the four tales grouped under the name of the first, "Open Sesame!" in Mrs. Baillie Reynolds's new book. Romance, in this connection, involves a quantity of hidden caves, subterranean waters, mysterious signals, Irish temperaments, concealed workrooms, haunted wells, starving prisoners, Balkan hospitals, and the like. Romance in wartime, furthermore, required a tremendous amount of spying and counter-spying. It is really doubtful whether any other little group of stories, staged in the present day, has ever included such a plethora of romantic furniture.

Mrs. Reynolds is not slothful in invention. Indeed one sometimes fears for her story, so elaborate is her imagination. "It Began With a Wedding," for instance, had the makings of a neat story in its promising, if not particularly novel, theme—the growth of love in a marriage of pique. In the hands of a capable analyst of character this theme would have been carefully developed. As it is, the main plot is sketched rather than soundly developed, and Mrs. Reynolds makes up for the deficiency by loading the story with a rather irrelevant spy episode.

The stories all deal with the war, though in most cases not the war at the front. They range from the Pyrenees to the Balkans, from hyphenated Americans to English intriguers. They rely for interest chiefly on a saturated solution of fantastic situations. They are lacking in finish, in proportion, in rapidity of movement, in distinction of any sort. Yet they are too ambitious to be classed with the mere thriller, for they do display some consciousness of the possibilities of characterization. One of the stories is frankly an affair of contrasting personalities.

Mrs. Reynolds is not quite adequate in either of the two roles which she tries to mix—either as a romancer or a delineator of character. But since those who hunger for adventure are less exacting than those who love the study of people, her book will be well received by the section of the reading public which seeks what the publishers call "dashing adventure, deep mystery, charming romance."

B. M. BOWER
Author of
"Skyrider," "The Thunder Bird," Etc.

"Rim o' the World" is the story of a ranch-feud between "cattle-rustlers" in Idaho. There is ample incident in this new Bower novel, which is quite the most typical story of the West that this popular author has written of late. The humor which characterizes the Bower novels is not wanting. "Rim o' the World" is an engrossing ranch story that will appeal to all who like virile fiction.

HEALTH THROUGH WILL POWER
By JAMES J. WALSH, M. D.
Medical Director, Fordham University, New York.

This volume is meant to help in the restoration of the will to its place as the supreme faculty of life. The author shows its preventive and curative power upon such universal ailments as coughs and colds, intestinal disorders, rheumatism, mental disturbances, etc., and the value of its application to the bad habits of self-pity, irregular and insufficient exercise, yielding to pain and sentimental sympathy.

The book is not technical, but clearly and concisely expressed for the benefit of the layman unversed in scientific, medical or psychological matters. It should win a wide and appreciative public.

UNHAPPY FAR-OFF THINGS
By LORD DUNSANY

Wonderful pen pictures of the war's destruction, by this Irish soldier and playwright. Lord Dunsany is at his best in describing war-swept villages and the ruined homes of the French. Like his "Tales of War," these vignettes, written in expressive, sensitive prose, are gems of literature. Whether he is depicting a destroyed cathedral; the white mound that was once a peasant's home, or the remains of a garden wall, Lord Dunsany invests his tales with an individual touch. The chaos of war was never before so brilliantly set forth.

denied other satisfaction, yet enables the lover spiritually to possess his lady with something very near completeness, so that he is able at the last to cheat "death of her fineness." Dodge Pleydon's love for Linda, his adoration of Linda's beauty, is the motive force which enables him, a sculptor who had formerly never been more than second rate, to produce two great statues. From the moment of their first meeting, she is "the source of his power."

Side by side with this study of an ideal love is an equally interesting one of the force of early impressions, early environment, and the manner in which these shape the plastic being of a child. Linda Condon is only ten years old when we are first introduced to her, a grave little girl, taking the very best care she can of her gay and beautiful and irresponsible mother. To this mother, nothing in the world is so important as her appearance, because on this depends her attraction for men and her consequent "good times." In her shallow, emotional way this mother loves Linda, and she does her best to instill into the child her own philosophy: "Love and marriage are two different things, and if you are going to be successful they must be kept separate." This account of Linda's early life with her mother and of their hotel-and-chiffons existence is very well done indeed, and makes up the most interesting part of the book. Then the mother, realizing that her looks are going, retires into what is for her "the old ladies' home" of a marriage with Mr. Moses Feldt, a rich widower possessed of two daughters of his own, and Linda's life enters upon a new phase. Later, while she is still very young, comes her first encounter with Dodge Pleydon.

There is a good deal of very careful and very delicate psychological analysis in the account of her attraction to him, and of the "hidden imperative sense" which brought about that break with him which, dramatically speaking, is the climax of the novel. After that moment, which comes about midway in the book, the interest lags, partly because the author's method is thenceforward almost purely an analytical and descriptive one. He tells us about what happens, but does not show it in the act of happening. We are informed that Linda's relations with her husband and her two children are thus and so, but we do not watch them develop, nor do we realize them as we did those of her earlier days and associations. However, Linda herself is well drawn, and so too are her mother and the kindly, sentimental, generous Jew, Moses Feldt. Neither Dodge Pleydon nor Arnaud Hallet, the two fine men who in their several ways loved Linda with complete devotion, ever emerges from the printed page as a live human being, though there are moments when the former seems on the verge of doing so. "Linda Condon" is a very well written novel, handled with more than a little subtlety and a good deal of deftness.

THE OBSTINATE LADY

THE OBSTINATE LADY. By W. E. Norris. Brentano's.

THERE is much of deftness and more than a little cleverness in Mr. Norris's new novel, "The Obstinate Lady." Through it all it is easy to discern the hand of the practiced craftsman, especially in the management of the smaller incidents of the plot and the minor actions of the characters. Moreover, the plot itself, while it has little or nothing of freshness either in its content or its presentation, is developed in a workmanlike way. But, unfortunately, along with its good qualities the book has some serious defects, the greatest being the failure of its leading character, Blanche Maddison, "The Obstinate Lady" of the title, to win the reader's sympathy or liking. She is neither real nor interesting, and one never feels her to be other than a lay figure moving in accordance with the author's dictates in order that his story may progress precisely as he wishes and intends that it shall. Nor is the hero, Tristram Rolfe, portrayed with very much more success than the heroine, though there are moments when one feels that he is about to take on something of flesh and blood. Then, too, while many of the incidents of the story are well managed, others are far from convincing. That one, for example, which wrecks Sydney Maddison's hopes is especially weak. Clever, astute and calculating men do sometimes make phenomenal blunders, though it is very difficult to believe that such a man as he was would ever have made one of that particular kind, for any experienced critic would have known how to produce the effect he wanted better and more effectually than could possibly be done by a "savage attack" on the work of an unknown author.

And yet, oddly enough, it is to this same Sydney Maddison that the reader's sym-

THE NOVELIST'S ART

BY one of those singular "contradictions that prove the rule," the first great novel in the history of literature, the novel whose fame remains undimmed after the lapse of more than three centuries and that seems destined to outlive the best of our contemporary fiction, in kinship in what is generally accepted as the best method and practice of the art of novel writing, "Don Quixote" was written for a purpose." Primarily it is a satirical attack on the absurd, exaggerated tales of knight errantry prevalent in the days of CERVANTES. The author covered these tales with the ridicule they deserved, pointed out the dangerous influence they were having on contemporary literature, and indicated how much more effective the simple realism of everyday life would be in the hands of the writer of fiction than the grotesque fantasies and extravagances that formed the stock-in-trade of the Harold Bell Wrights and the Florence Barclays of his day. In all literature there is not a more brilliant piece of creative literary criticism than "Don Quixote," and for that very reason one would expect to find it defective as fiction. The propaganda novel is always under a heavy handicap in a contest with those novels that have for their chief aim the unraveling of a complicated plot, the portrayal of character, or an entertaining description of contemporary life and manners. "Don Quixote" has no plot to speak of; it is satirical in intention; but, incidentally to its main theme, it creates and develops character with such profound sympathy and insight that its critical purpose has long since been forgotten and we read it today as a great human story the pathos and humor of which has as vital an appeal now as it ever had.

PROFESSOR HENRY BURROWES LATHROP, in "The Art of the Novelist," (Dodd, Mead & Co.,) notes the strong human appeal that this "absurd monomaniac" of the Spain of CERVANTES still has for readers of novels and finds in the very absurdity of the old Don a reason for his immortality. Such figures, moreover, are to be found more than once in the older English novel. "Parson Adams, the Vicar of Wakefield, Matthew Bramble, Uncle Toby, Colonel Newcome, the Baron of Bradwardine, and many more of SCOTT'S characters, Mr. Pickwick and a cherubic host of DICKENS'S creation are personages who find their fit abiding place in the somewhat capricious world of the loosely ordered epic novel of the earlier English novel." But in the typical novel of today this kind of character is rarely found, scarcely attempted, indeed, a fact that indicates a change in the methods of our fiction writers, a new or at least different conception of the novelist's art. From Professor LATHROP'S careful survey of the subject one gathers, and rightly, that this art does not yield itself easily to a simple formula or definition. Theoretically, the propaganda novel is antagonistic to the highest fictional art; and yet one can point to more than the single instance of "Don Quixote" as proof that this kind of novel can be successful as fiction. If its propagandist theme outweighs its plot and character features its success is not apt to be permanent. Twenty-five years ago "Robert Elsmere" was decidedly the novel of the hour. It went through edition after edition, was discussed as few novels ever have been discussed, in almost every religious and literary journal of this country and Great Britain. Its popularity was not at all of the traditional "best seller" variety, but extended from one season into another and appeared to be based on something permanent, vital, in the book itself. But today who reads "Robert Elsmere"? It is a good book; when it was published it would have been safe to call it—as it was called—a great book. But it was much more of a propaganda tract than a "novel of life and manners." It portrayed a current phase of religious belief with vividness and apparent accuracy; but just so soon as this phase of belief went through its inevitable change the one vital interest that maintained "Robert Elsmere" in the popular regard disappeared. The book became automatically out of date—far more out of date, indeed, than "Don Quixote" can ever be—and there is not the slightest likelihood that it will ever be read again except by those who find pleasure in unearthing matters that have a purely antiquarian interest.

THE fate of such books as "Robert Elsmere" and the success of a "Don Quixote"—both "propaganda novels"—indicate the difficulty one is bound to encounter in attempting to define the art of the novelist. We are wont to extol the quality of timeliness in a book as well as in most other things; but timeliness, evidently, unless it is tempered by a certain universality of interest, is quite as apt to be a defect as a merit in a novel. With this consideration in mind one cannot help wondering how many of the deservedly popular novels of the day will live to entertain another generation; for there is no question that this element of timeliness is the one thing that contemporary novelists try to get into their art if that is possible. A novel that is not "timely," indeed, even if it is gifted with the highest qualities in other respects, is more apt than not to fail of an immediate hearing, however well it may fare with posterity. How to capture the timely and make it "not for an age but for all time" is, naturally, the great problem for the novelist, the secret that insures immortality to his art. Fiction that is real, human, provocative of sympathies that are perennial with mankind, seems to be the fiction that solves the problem. But formulas that attempt to pack this art into a few words are necessarily vague, unsatisfactory, a fact, indeed, that is apparent in Professor LATHROP'S book. One cannot read the latter, however, without reaching a finer, more discriminating appreciation of the novels that reach us from one season to another, even if we are not able to view from all sides the many-faceted art of the novelist.

HISTORICALLY Professor LATHROP'S book furnishes information that it is well to have. In a general way we all knew that the vogue of fiction was comparatively recent. But the actual figures showing this are not easily procurable. Here we learn:

> Novels, printed by tens or twenties in each year from 1750 to 1820, are now produced at the rate of a score a week. If it is true—as is most certain—that in the history of printed books is to be found the vital history of modern thought and feeling, then the increase in the production of novels is one of the notable facts of the last hundred years. How and by what steps, by what advances, sudden or gradual, did it take place? The first great upward step came suddenly, between 1820 and 1830. In the former year, as Professor MASSON reasonably estimates in his British Novelists, there were about twenty-five long works of prose fiction, mainly novels, published in England—one a fortnight. The number had been practically constant for some years. All at once the annual total starts up—in 1830 reaching at least 101 or 102 a week, and at that point remains practically unchanged for nearly thirty years—in 1850 being about a hundred, in 1880 about ninety. The reason of this leap forward, as Professor MASSON believes, was the successful example of Sir WALTER SCOTT. • • • •
> Some fifty years later the yearly "output" of novels began once again to increase, at first slowly, then with steady progress, and then with a triumphant and startling leap ahead. • • • The annual number of religious works remains pretty constant; that of scientific and historical and social works increases almost to an equality with them; but fiction remains far in the lead. The influence of the war, indeed, has cut down the novels as it has other luxuries—from 1,226 in 1913 to 1,014 in 1914, and to 753 in 1918; but it has not yet brought fiction to the level of serious subjects. The novel is still dominant.

It is true that the novel still is dominant. It is also true that this dominance is not so marked, so spectacular, as it was only a few years ago. Whether the decline is due to a weakening in the art of the novelist or to a change in popular taste is a question still to be answered.

TEMPORARY WORDS

and when it was retired from service it took its name into oblivion with it.

If, after our civil war came to an end, in 1865, some curious inquirer had anticipated Professor Smith's happy thought and had compiled a list of the locutions then familiar in our mouths as household words, any man now under 50 would read that little lexicon with constant surprise at his unfamiliarity with not a few of the phrases he would there find catalogued. I wonder how many of the younger readers of this review could define "bounty jumper" or "coffee cooler," "fire zouave" or "grapevine"? I doubt if any of them could declare the difference between a "Parrott" and a "Columbiad." And I think they would be completely puzzled to explain why it was that a trustworthy negro was then often spoken of as a "reliable contraband."

When the rumors of war die down in the distance of time, and when we are no longer compelled to consider certain things which seemed hugely important when they were matters of life and death, then the names we have given to these things are likely to drop out of sight and even to fade from memory. And now we are still aware that our soldiers and sailors called certain missiles "Big Berthas" and "Jack Johnsons," "ash cans" and "coal boxes," "crumps" and "whizbangs"; but if any of our grandchildren chance to browse around in the books about the war which we have all been reading eagerly and excitedly, they will have reason to be grateful to Professor Smith for his glossary.

If any unforeseen succession of sanguinary conflicts fill the years between us and these grandchildren of ours, they will have had occasion to acquaint themselves with the few words which this war of ours will have added to the permanent vocabulary of the military art. "Depth bomb," "drum fire," "gas mask," "iron ration," "smoke screen," and "zero hour"—these are all new words which have come to stay, so far as any one can now see into the future. And we may be sure that "tank" will not be retired from service. Of course, when we consider it calmly, we cannot fail to perceive that "tank" is not an appropriate name for an armed tractor. Strictly speaking, a tank is a receptacle intended to hold a liquid and to be fixed in place; it is not a steel-clad motor filled with men and guns. None the less is the armed tractor the one indisputable novelty which this war has added to the arsenal; it is as a "tank" that it has won its fame; and a "tank" it will remain so long as its utility as a weapon of offense endures.

When we examine Professor Smith's interesting lexicon, we cannot but note a few words which are not new, even if they have been made more widely known in the last five years. "Leather neck," for instance, has long been the recognized nickname for a marine; and "snotty" has long been—at least in the British Navy—the recognized nickname for a midshipman. "Snotty" was used years before the war by Kipling, always avid of effective technicalities; and readers of "Stalky and Co." will remember that the Beetle always called the school chaplain "Padre," which is evidence that this friendly title has been long current in the British service. "Limey," which is the name American soldiers applied to British soldiers, was borrowed by them from the sailors of our navy, who have, for a century at least, termed the British sailors "lime juicers" because of the regular ration of lime juice as a preventive of scurvy.

So "batman" and "dog robber" are old American Army names for the "striker," the private who is willing to act as the personal attendant of his officer. So "canteen" is the established name for the general store of a regiment, and "doughboy" is the established name for the infantryman, the cavalryman being known as a "yellow leg." But "gob" as the name of a sailor is apparently a linguistic novelty; and its origin is still a mystery. "Anzac" is another new word, deftly combined out of the initials of the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps, according to the method which had already enriched the English language with "cabal." Perhaps "slacker" is also a verbal novelty, taken over by us Americans from the British; it is equivalent to "shirker," and it is what the French have contemptuously called an "embusque." And "go west," as an ameliorative synonym for "die," is a Briticism which seems not to have appealed to Americans.

Although, as is natural and necessary, Professor Smith gives up most of his pages to the new words of warfare, it must not be supposed that he has neglected the latest additions to the vocabulary of that motley peacemade of citizens, the Man in the Street always eager to acquire novel vocables. He lists "jitney" and "flivver," "wop" and "jazz," "skip stop" and "pep." He cites Colonel Roosevelt's "weasel words" and President Wilson's "watchful waiting," "too proud to fight," and "peace without victory." He defines—or at least he quotes—definitions of "Bolsheviki," "Bolshevism," and "Bolshevist." He explains "cubism" and "futurism" in painting, and "polyphonic prose," (which seems to be recommended for use in the No Man's Land between prose and verse.) He tells us what manner of thing a "fabricated ship" is, and what a "hell ship" is. He has a quotation (from Colonel Roosevelt, ever swift to seize on a picturesque locution) for "fifty-fifty"; and he has another (from Major Palmer) for "pass the buck." He catalogues "swat" and "pussy foot," (a most delectable vocable!)

He does not omit "foxtrot" or "flu" or "swank." And he calls attention to "addict," a new word for an old thing, since there have been grown men addicted to opium, to hasheesh, to chloral, and to cocaine ever since these things revealed their possibilities for evil and for good. Oddly enough, he fails to include "coke fiend"—an addict to cocaine. And the result of his diligent investigation is to confirm the impression that the English language is now, what indeed it always has been, an Inn of Strange Meetings, with its queer transients and its welcome regular boarders.

A beautiful life and an ugly life have their growth together beside the sea and the green Downs of Sussex. Opposite in every way they take opposite paths to the love of the same woman . . . one whom life has wounded, and whom one seeks to shelter, and the other to make his prey.

A splendid book, reminiscent in its poignancy and strength of Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," but made joyous by Ollivant's unfailing optimism and faith.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

SIR OLIVER LODGE writes to his American publishers, the George H. Doran Company, that he expects to spend part of the Winter and Spring in the United States, arriving in New York probably early in January. He will deliver a series of lectures on "The Reality of the Unseen," "The Structure of an Atom," and other themes of a spiritualistic or scientific nature.

Archdeacon Hudson Stuck of the Yukon region, author of "Ten Thousand Miles With a Dog Sled" and "Voyages on the Yukon," urges those who sent their old magazines overseas during the war to divert at least some of them now to Alaska, where, he says, there is great need for good reading matter of any kind. Magazines and books should be sent in care of St. Matthew's Reading Room at Fairbanks, Alaska. The many readers who found great pleasure in his previous books will be glad to learn that his forthcoming volume, "A Winter Circuit of Our Arctic Coast," will soon be ready for publication by the Scribners.

Houghton Mifflin Company has ready for immediate publication the third and fourth volumes of ex-Senator Albert J. Beveridge's "Life of John Marshall," which will complete his four-volume biography of the famous Chief Justice.

The results of the contest lately instituted by The Forum for cartoons and stories dealing with Mexico, for which it offered a total of $750 in prizes, appear in the current number of that magazine. The prize for the best cartoon was won by Lou Morgan, a native of Texas, who has lived several years in Mexico and served during the war in the Tank Corps. The winner of the prize for the best short story was Lucille Wetherell, who based her piece of fiction upon some of her own experiences during a long residence in Mexico. The number contains five Mexican articles, including one by the Mexican Ambassador, Ygnacio Bonillas, "What Mexico is Striving For," and one by Congressman Hudspeth of El Paso, Texas, urging a military protectorate.

The Appletons announce that Anthony Hope's new mystery story, "The Secret of the Tomb," has gone into a fourth printing within a few weeks of publication.

Ina Coolbrith, poet of the Pacific Coast, is spending the Winter in New York, putting the finishing touches upon two new volumes of poems which will be published in the Spring. There is to be at that time also a new edition of her "Songs of the Golden Gate," published a dozen or more years ago. To Miss Coolbrith was voted the honor, by the Authors' Congress of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, of being its Poet Laureate, and at an imposing session of the congress she was crowned with a laurel wreath.

In addition to the biography of Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson by her sister, Mrs. Sanches, which the Scribners announce for early publication, that house is preparing to bring out "A Book of R. L. S.," by George E. Brown, which will bring into handy compass much information about Stevenson. It will have an easily consulted arrangement of the already well-known facts about his life, travels, friends, and work, and much additional matter not hitherto generally known. It will be, in effect, a Stevensonian encyclopedia, but will be prepared with an eye to readability as well as accuracy.

Maurice Maeterlinck will arrive in New York in the latter part of next month, in time to attend the premiere of "The Blue Bird" in operatic form at the Metropolitan Opera House, Dec. 27. He will then begin his lecture tour with an address at Carnegie Hall on Jan. 2, and afterward will cross the country to the Pacific Coast, speaking in all the principal cities. It will be his first visit to the United States. His lecture will be called "The Unknown Shore" and will be given in English.

Henry P. Davison's "The American Red Cross in the Great War," the official story of what the Red Cross did both in America and in each of the warring countries of Europe, by the Chairman of its War Council, is ready for immediate publication by the Macmillan Company.

It would seem that the gentle and friendly spirit of Oliver Wendell Holmes has been acquiring steadily increasing influence in Germany during the war. The Houghton Mifflin Company has just received from a German publisher a statement of sales that began, just as if nothing of consequence had been happening. "I beg to hand you the inclosed statement. The definite remittance will follow as soon as international negotiations concerning rate of exchange and payments permit us to send them." From the statement it appeared that Holmes's "Over the Teacups," which the German people had shown no desire to buy before the war, has had quite a notable sale since 1913, reaching its biggest point in 1918.

Scott & Seltzer have ready for publication an account of "Lenin: The Man and His Work," written from personal observation and knowledge by Albert Rhys Williams, Colonel Raymond Robins, and Arthur Ransome, all of whom are on terms of intimate friendship with the Red Dictator of Russia.

Archibald Marshall, the English author, who is generally described as "the modern Trollope," will come to the United States next Spring, and will write during an extended visit a series of magazine articles dealing with American life from the English point of view, somewhat after the manner of Price Collier's book on "England and the English." Just before the war Mr. Marshall made a walking trip through Provence and wrote a book about it which, on account of war conditions, was withheld from publication until the end of the conflict. Dodd, Mead & Co. will bring it out in this country next Spring and they will publish this Fall a new novel by Mr. Marshall to be called "Sir Harry."

London periodicals are pointing out parallels between the childhood of Hugh Walpole and many incidents in the life of the lad who is the central character in his new novel, "Jeremy," and coming to the conclusion that the story is more or less autobiographical.

The Macmillan Company will bring out this week Edgar Lee Masters's new book, "Starved Rock," in which he is said to find inspiration for his poetical genius in the fundamentals of life and to deal with man's effort to glimpse the forces which order the universe.

A WOMAN WHO DARED

A WOMAN WHO DARED. By Dale Drummond. New York: Britton Publishing Company.

Dale Drummond's "A Woman Who Dared" had serial publication in the daily press. That was appropriate. In its barren moralizings, its crude construction, its matter-of-fact sentimentality, and its monotonous repetitions, it suggests the "Advice to the Lovelorn" column, though in the matter of style it has a humdrum straightforwardness that compares favorably with the sugary gushing of that popular American institution. Bored commuters, cuss comrades, after exhausting the sporting page on a dawdling train, might bring themselves to read it. It is without artistry, personality, or grace.

Katherine Burroughs, married to a villain—not a heavy villain, more's the pity, for he might have been entertaining, but a stupid person who surely could not rate above the middleweight class—is the woman who dared. Just what she dared, or was attempting to dare, is not quite clear. She dared to open a millinery shop and become independent of her hopeless husband, but it was her not daring that kept her anchored to him until the author took pity on her and let her be a widow instead of a divorcee.

CHILDREN'S BOOK WEEK

My-Thumb," "Golden Hair and the Three Bears," and "The Brave Tin Soldier."

Very nice little stories for the younger children are in "With the Little Folks," by Ina L. Wright. (Houghton Mifflin.) There is a wide variety of stories, each a little better than the other. The pictures are by Harold Cue. "Orchard and Meadow," by Zoe Meyer. (Little, Brown & Co.,) was written to interest children in the nature objects about their own homes. Among the stories are those about "The Bee's Secret," "Mother Quail's Trick," "The Moon Moth," "Jimmy Chipmunk's Dinner," &c., with forty illustrations, excellent text pictures in black and white, with a few larger colored ones, by Clara Atwood Fitts.

A lively little volume is the "Further Adventures of Mollie, Waddy and Tony," by Paul Waitt. (Little, Brown & Co.) Nice colored pictures by Alice Bolam Preston. This is a second story of these three nice elephants that travel all over the world, have very remarkable times and amaze people with their astonishing tricks. Sometimes the elephants are quite naughty, as when they ate up all the cream puffs from the cook's galley on the steamer, but at times they looked very solemn. In Spain little boys expect the Three Wise Men to come to them Christmas Eve to put presents in their shoes which they leave outside the door. That was what four-year-old little Quito Gonsales had done the night that Mollie, Waddy and Tony reached Madrid and when he saw them he was sure they were the wise men and ran out to speak to them.

Take a Reading Course

Everybody reads, but too many read without any plan, and to no purpose. The college graduate is like other people in the need of system, but a little more likely to realize his need. The Chautauqua Reading Course is useful alike to the person of limited training, who labors many nights over each book, and the critic or vigorous man of affairs who can sweep thru them all in a few hours. For either, a group of related, intelligible, and competent studies leads to a well rounded result.

Don't Read at Random

For many years, the very mention of a reading course has meant without further explanation the Chautauqua Reading Course. It was the first and is still the best and it alone has a world-wide fame. The cost is trifling, $6 for a year. Are you afraid wasting your odd minutes? Write for free synopsis or mail this ad, signed, to Box 81,

IMPRESSIONS of THEODORE ROOSEVELT

By LAWRENCE F. ABBOTT
(Editor of "The Outlook")

THE author had better opportunities than any other person to study "T. R." at close range. Here are eight features to be found in no other Roosevelt "biography."

1. The truth about Roosevelt's supposed admiration for the Kaiser.
2. The only complete story of the dramatic tour through Egypt, Europe and Great Britain after the African hunt. The author acted as Roosevelt's volunteer secretary.
3. Why Roosevelt accused Tolstoi of immorality.
4. Why Roosevelt broke with Taft in 1912—the inside facts.
5. How the Guildhall "Govern or Go!" speech in 1910 helped to prepare Great Britain for the World War.
6. How the Paris speeches at the Sorbonne strengthened France for the War.
7. A facsimile reproduction from a letter descriptive of the famous Figskin Library.
8. Extracts from letters Col. Roosevelt wrote the author from the African wilderness.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A FAMOUS LABRADOR DOCTOR

A LABRADOR DOCTOR. The Autobiography of Wilfred Thomason Grenfell, K. B. E. Illustrated. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company.

IT is not often that a book of any sort has the good fortune to be furnished with a frontispiece so illuminating and so forecasting as is this gateway to Dr. Grenfell's story of his life. For it is the portrait of the author, and the spirit of the book is so manifest in his pictured countenance that even if the reader had never previously heard of him and his work expectation would instantly be raised of just the wholesome, human, humorous, compassionate, square-dealing and capable kind of man who stands revealed in every phase of his life story. Parts of his achievements Dr. Grenfell and others have told before, but here the whole tale is presented for the first time comprehensively, in all its details, and so illumined by the spirit of the man whose story it is as to bring out strongly the spiritual greatness that has made the work possible.

Being an autobiography, the author is, of course, the centre of the story from the beginning, and for the first time those who have been interested, moved, inspired by his work can find out just what manner of man he is and has always been, how the child was father to the man, and how the surroundings of his youth influenced his development. The first chapters, which tell directly and simply the story of his childhood and youth, are well worth the study of parents and educators and of all who are interested in the problems of the influence of heredity and environment upon the character. The whole book is especially worthy the study of all women who are mothers, or who expect ever to become mothers, because of the reverent and grateful spirit with which he makes plain the untold and never-ending influence of his mother's influence in the shaping of his character and the direction of his life. The simplicity upon his spirit and his career ought to be a new revelation of her power and importance in the world to any woman who is the mother of children. Dr. Grenfell was the son of a schoolmaster and spent his early years near Chester, where the Sands of Dee were his favorite playground. He and his brothers lived largely in the open and his account of their childhood shows that it must have been a wholesome, happy time in which their outdoor sports and their home environment combined to develop vigorous bodies and active minds, manliness, pluck, resource, uprightness, and the sporting spirit. An inmate love of the sea was fed, as he grew older, by Summer trips in an old boat which his brother and himself acquired and navigated, always "poaching it" with the keenest pleasure for several weeks. He tells many stories of those early days, stories which show the Grenfell brothers to have been bubbling over with love of fun, always ready for a prank and diligent and resourceful in thinking up and working out all manner of prankish schemes and jokes. But notwithstanding all this their intellectual interests were evidently keen and they took real pleasure in mental activities of nearly all kinds, especially in study of life out of doors and the phases and processes of nature, in which Dr. Grenfell several times notes with gratitude they were constantly encouraged and aided. Not until he was eighteen years old, in 1883, did young Grenfell begin to take thought of the future and what sort of life he was going to live. Then a discussion of the subject with the family physician brought him at once and decisively to the conviction that in medicine he would find his dominant interest. Of the doctor's office and a pickled human brain he saw there and the significance of it which he dimly realized: "It attracted me," he says in graphic phrase, "as did the gramophone, the camera, the automobile."

The two chapters devoted to his medical training in London are interesting in many ways, partly because they were for him a time of important development wherein he passed the most consequential crossroads of life and chose that which led inevitably to his later career, partly because of his description of the medical training of that time, partly because of the vivid picture he gives of his surroundings, the methods of work and the beginnings of movements for human betterment that have since attained huge proportions and partly because of the many accounts and anecdotes of the famous physicians under whom he studied and whose work he watched at clinic and in hospital. Sir Frederick Treves, King Edward's personal physician, was one of these, and of him the author speaks always with the greatest regard and honor because of his signal ability and his vigorous methods of working and living, which appealed to the ardent and adventurous spirit of the young student. In those days, as always than a single generation ago though it was, surgical methods were only beginning to be adopted by the most progressive of medical men, and he says of Treves that his constant admonishment to his students was, "Gentlemen, the secret of surgery is the nailbrush."

It was while during his student days in London that Grenfell came to "the determination to make religion a real effort to do as I thought Christ would do in my place as a doctor," and the influence that thus determined the course of his life and finally resulted in his marvelous work in the Labrador region was a Moody and Sanky series of meetings in the London slums. Already practical and energetic and desirous of seeing the thought and the word flower into the deed, he used spare hours when he had them, his Sundays and his Summer vacations, in practical work for the regeneration of the boys and young men of the purlieus that surrounded the hospitals in which he worked. It was because of this work and the spiritual development that it and the interpretation he put upon religion were giving to his character that he was asked by Sir Frederick Treves to join the little band of physicians and surgeons that were making possible the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen which in several small vessels made the rounds of the fishing fleets in the North Sea with both bodily and spiritual ministration for the fishermen. And his success here led him, after a few years, to make his first trip for similar work on the other side of the Atlantic. That first Summer settled the rest of his life for Dr. Grenfell, and for twenty-seven years he has labored in that same field with such zeal and success and such pleasure in his work as fall to the lot of few men. Three-fourths of the book deals with the marvelous tale of how this work developed and was organized and of how, because it was such good work and he was doing it so well and so unselfishly, aid came to him from the ends of the earth to expand and increase its influence. It is a wonderful tale and Dr. Grenfell tells it as successfully as he has lived it. No one who is in the least interested in human endeavors to better the world can afford to miss it. Every now and then Dr. Grenfell explains his view of life in a pithy sentence or two that illuminate the motives that have inspired him and are so weighty with wisdom and so well expressed that they stick in the reader's mind. Thus: "Experience has taught me that one human life has its limits of direct human impetus, but that its most lasting value is its indirect influence." "Show me a schoolmaster who does not love his boys and you show me one who is of no use." "Love builds for a future, however remote." That rare faculty of imagination which is the inspiration of all great lovers of men is not alone indispensable, for hand in hand with this inevitably goes the vision of one's own opportunity to help."

Not for nothing do those little crinkles show at the mouth and eye corners in Dr. Grenfell's portrait. For, deeply in earnest and filled with love of his fellow-man though the book is, it fairly ripples with humor. Few are the pages in which there is not something to provoke a smile or an outright laugh. So, also, on many a page does it stir to pity and compassion to the point of tears. Dr. Grenfell is a good story teller, and the hundreds upon hundreds of anecdotes which run off from the point of his pen are always pithy and to the point, graphic and replete with human drama. They run the whole gamut of human emotions, from the funny schoolboy pranks to the grim and hopeless horror of some Newfoundland tragedy.

The volume has many phases of interest, for Dr. Grenfell is a many-sided man whose mind and soul respond to a thousand calls of nature and of life. But the impression of this story of his life that chiefly stands out in the reader's memory is the vision of the great work for the healing of men's bodies and the helping of their souls which he has inspired and developed. In one of the final chapters, dealing with the future of the mission, he says that it needs an endowment of a million dollars to enable it to carry on the bare essentials of its work. It is a small sum, in comparison with the vast ones that are being used in foolishness and waste, and this life story of the man who has created the work ought to inspire the turning of many times that amount to the uses of the Grenfell Mission.

The concluding volume, the fourth, of Frank H. Simonds's "History of the World War" will soon be ready for publication by Doubleday, Page & Co. The sales of the three volumes already published have reached the sum of 100,000 copies. Mr. Simonds has been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor by France in recognition of the value of his story of the war.

ELLEN GLASGOW, among the established novelists of our country, easily stands in the front rank, says The North American Review. "None of the modern inducements to gain popularity by lowering her own fine standards of what the novel is and should be, have corrupted her."

Her first novel in more than three years, this is Miss Glasgow's comment on the changed currents of American life. With an artist's scrutiny, she has probed its depths, and has seen America knitting together—into a unity of deals.

This vision colors and makes bright the book, although the individuals in it, those who build their Ark for the New Era, amid the scorn and suspicions of the onlookers, have their burden of misunderstandings to bear.

In the powerful drawing of "the builder," and in the poignant realization of his tragedy, Miss Glasgow's achievement is great.

But greater still is the mercilessly truthful portrait of the woman, his wife, who, clothing her little spirit in the appearances of virtue, deceives the coarse vision of the world.

Why only 1 man in 20 stood the test

IN the tests recently conducted by the War Department to determine the ability of soldiers and officers, it was found that only 5 per cent. had the mental background necessary to hold the big jobs in the army.

Among our millions of fighting men, the pick of America's manhood, only 1 man in 20 had the imagination, the poise, the command of facts, the resource demanded to hold first-rank positions.

No army in the world has ever been more representative of the civilian population than the draft divisions of the United States. Which is the same as saying that what was true with the army is true of all Americans today.

Only 1 man in 20 is mentally equipped to lead, to bear the big responsibilities, to reap the big rewards. Of all the men and women who go about their daily tasks, only 1 in 20 has prepared himself to achieve a full measure of success.

Somehow, the rest, even those that started with the same advantages, stay on behind.

Think of the hundreds of men and women you know who can think of nothing and talk of nothing but the routine of their own homes or of their own business—whose originality and imagination have become deadened through a lack of outside interests. Then in contrast picture those few you know who are attaining the full measure of leadership.

Men and women you admire

Somehow these few manage to push across that deadline which divides mediocrity from success. They have at their command new ideas which enable them to give individuality to all they say and do. They have a varied mental background—a wide knowledge of the world.

Their opinions invariably draw attention. They are always listened to. In business and in life these men and women stamp success upon everything they touch.

And why? What makes them different?

There is just one answer. They have learned what every successful man and woman must learn—that neither the greatest natural ability nor the most thorough business knowledge can carry far in life, unless a wide knowledge of the world goes with it.

Even in their busiest days they have always made time to broaden their viewpoint by worth-while reading and thinking—even if only to study for a few moments the reproduction of a famous picture, or to read a few pages of some great discovery of science, some epoch-making event in history, the account of some activity in a foreign country, or of some great man's achievement.

For just such men and women as these—too busy to devote hours to study, yet eager to know the value of the stimulus of new ideas, the Mentor Association was founded.

It was seven years ago that the Mentor Association started with the idea that everyone has time to "learn one new thing every day." Today the fact that its membership list has quickly doubled, trebled, quadrupled in size, confirms the correctness of that belief. Its members represent the progressive element in every branch of American life.

Even at the age of sixty Andrew Carnegie still had a tutor for himself to help him gain knowledge of the world that lay outside his business Men prominent in finance, commerce, the arts or professions—and women distinguished in social and educational fields, have joined the Mentor Association. The chief executive of the U. S. Steel Corporation, the wife of a nationally known financier, a celebrated American novelist, a noted jurist, the rector of a large New York church, the manufacturer of the most widely known watch in the world—these are the types of men and women that find in the Mentor Association just the inspiration and ideas they need most.

What membership in the Mentor Association brings

The Mentor Association combines an information service with a skillfully directed course of general reading. This Service Department offers you assistance in preparing material for club and school work. Each issue of the Mentor presents material on interesting subjects, which you can read by expending just a few minutes each day. In short, the Mentor Association with its plan to teach one new thing daily is a means of making leisure moments count in busy people's lives.

A year's membership in the Mentor Association entitles you to the following:

1.—"The Mentor"—published twice each month, 24 numbers in a year—ably and engagingly written, clearly and thoroughly illustrated. Each number gives a concise, clear and entertaining exposition on some subject in

BRITISH REVOLUTION AND AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

THE BRITISH REVOLUTION AND THE AMERICAN DEMOCRACY. By Norman Angell. New York: B. W. Huebsch.

NORMAN ANGELL won deserved repute and authority with his "Great Illusion," demonstrating that war was impossible because of its great cost, and the fact that even victory brings no worth-while profit. He ought to have been right. Perhaps he ought to be right in his support of proposals for alleviation of war costs which make peace hardly more endurable than war. Who is to pay the interest on the two hundred billions which this war has cost during the generations which must pass before the principal can be lifted off the shoulders of those who shall come after us? The problem arises as a sequel of war, but it is rather a revival than a new conception. The war between capital and labor preceded the war between the nations, and now succeeds it. Military victory makes it sure that the world must be born anew politically. Mr. Angell's position is that it must be born anew also socially and economically. To that end he adopts and expounds the report of the British Labor Party on reconstruction through a "new social order."

To some that program seems socialistic to the point of Bolshevism. Mr. Angell's sermon in support of it sounds like the deliverance of a priest turned heretic. The new heaven which is to come through the new earth is preached in the loftiest spirit, as though dissenters were little better than the wicked, and as though the new crusaders possess a monopoly of the Christian virtues of faith, hope, and charity. Not for a moment does Mr. Angell reveal perception that his spirit is that of the Pharisaism of German Kultur, or of the savagery of Sorel's defense of the cult of violence as the best weapon of the missionaries of benevolence toward the poor. It is written that "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." The promoters of the new social order take little interest in inheritance, and make no profession of meekness. They are as strong men armed who know what they want, and where to find it, and propose presently to take it, by means of slaughter of those who oppose them in Russia, and with protestations of superior authority in many lands. The decision regarding in which camp Americans shall enlist turns in no small degree upon what is thought of Mr. Angell's exposition of this cult, sometimes thought new, but really as old as the differences in the talents and fortunes of men.

Mr. Angell proposes as the "real question" before the nations the "future of the institution of private property, and the kind of industrial democracy which we intend in future to permit." The right to possess property is to be succeeded by "the right of the people to control their industrial life and government, the right of the workers themselves to determine the conditions of their daily lives, by controlling the economic basis of the community, the means of production, distribution, and exchange." Under present indications those who possess property exercise these rights, and there is no obstacle to anybody's earning any amount of property, and qualifying himself for the exercise of rights in corresponding degree. But in the old-new ethics and economy "property is theft," and Mr. Angell asks are we lynching Bolshevism or giving it a fair hearing? He draws the line at robbery of the robbers, the owners of property, by individuals, but asserts the right of the State "to take private property for social ends as absolutely as it now takes the life of the worker for its military purposes." That is the plea of the Germans and the Bolshevid of any land. It is not the plea of democracy. Democracy pays for what it takes. Democracy conscripts soldiers in support of the ends which are the soldiers' very own, not the State's. He truly remarks that "the supreme paradox of our time is that this war, fought for the purpose of giving us secure democracy and permanent peace, has developed forces which endanger those things, and which, unless radically dealt with, might well destroy them." The best way to defend our representative institutions is to reconstruct them—"the representative basis of our assemblies must not only be geographical areas, but by trades, industries, professions; we must vote not only as men and women, but also as farmers, railwaymen, teachers, doctors," in short, as anything but democrats and citizens. This is in order the better to distribute "the disposal of the surplus above the accepted standard of life." Hitherto the individual has set the standard of his own life. Hereafter the State is to set the standard of life and dispose of the surplus by the votes of the classes, each of which will increase its share not by increase of production as in the manner of capital, which works for piecework wages, but by diminishing the shares of other classes. The harmony which would result from this method of distributing the surplus is illustrated from the ease and unity shown by the world's distributers at Versailles, and in the countries which adopt Bolshevist methods as surely as they adopt Bolshevist principles. These are the doctrines which the conscript soldiers are to impose on their countrymen, victors over their compatriots as well as over their enemies. This was not a war over politics, or dynasties, or to settle racial and boundary feuds. It was a war over property, and the result is socialization already of mines and railways, and soon perhaps of insurance, banking, and all corporate industry. These issues under the new democracy will be settled by the votes of those who do not own the properties to be disposed of.

Such is the program of the British Labor Party, or rather of the faction assuming to speak for it. It is disturbing to find it supported by eminently respectable citizens, and Mr. Angell lends his high talents to that cause. His book will be a revelation to many who have not suspected whither fine language and covetous thoughts were leading them. It is reassuring to reflect that at its last annual convention our Federation of Labor reaffirmed its adherence to old-fashioned trade unionism "pure and simple," and denounced the authors of the "new social order" as theorists and politicians rather than as representatives of the classes sordidly to be benefited by this marvel of benevolence.

A MUCH-WORKED PLOT

The New York Times Review of Books:

IT is interesting to trace the history of the plot of "Unto Others," as presented by Clare Amberton in the last issue of the Unpartisan Review.

This piece appeared originally as a one-act play at the Grand Guignol, Paris, was called "Sabotage," and was the work in collaboration of Ch. Hellem, W. Vaicros, and Pol d'Estoc. When Willard Huntington Wright was editor of the Smart Set he reprinted that version.

In its next incarnation the story was called "The Striker," and was printed in The Harvard Advocate. It was signed by Jacob Davis of the class of '19. William Marion Reedy, reprinting this version on Aug. 27, 1917, in Reedy's Mirror, introduced it with an editorial note in which he spoke of it as being "boyish, as befits an undergraduate," but praised its dramatic quality. In its next issue the Mirror carried a letter from Mr. Wright, in which he told of having reprinted the original; and added:

> The crudities of Mr. Davis's version are due solely to the fact that this ambitious young Harvard author is not a particularly clever plagiarist. Or perhaps it should say since we live in psychic and esoteric times) that his subconscious memory was inaccurate. It may even be that the crudities are due to a knothole or some other flaw in the outis beard. Or to a spilling of cosmic fluids. Or to poor telepathic connection. But whatever the explanation for this parallelism, the job was bungled.

It ought to be said in Miss Amberton's behalf that she shows a greater familiarity with Bolshevist or syndicalist logic, conclusions, shibboleths, and sympathies than the originators of the story or their earlier imitator, Mr. Davis. To that extent her equipment for her first essay in "fiction," as she styles "Unto Others," is superb. But she should have chosen a plot not so often pilfered really. Perhaps in her case, too, it was the unconscious mind at work.

Whether conscious or unconscious doesn't disturb Henry Holt, editor of the Unpartisan Review; for when I wrote to him, setting forth the foregoing facts, he said, in the course of his reply:

> As your letter is the third I have received regarding the French play and "Unto Others," that identity seems very close—so close that hereafter I had better watch out. Your letter touching the vicissitudes of said plot is interesting, but I seriously question the policy of publishing it in the Unpartisan Review.

Russia

A truly hopeful view of the great Russian problem is presented by Professor Joseph M. Goldstein of the University of Moscow in "Russia: Her Economic Past and Future." The author apparently is confident that his country will be rescued from anarchy and that it will presently start on a straight road to prosperity. He shows, by study of the country's economic past, that the Russian people are capable of making good use of their natural resources, and he predicts that before long, with financial assistance, they will resume their industrial activity and make rapid strides toward solvency and wealth. Professor Goldstein sees big opportunities in Russia for American capital and enterprise. (Russian Information Bureau in the United States.)

HENRI BARBUSSE'S great novel

LIGHT

By the Author of "Under Fire"

The Philadelphia Public Ledger says:

"In Light the author has given his enormous public a splendid story of life as it must appear after the darkness of war, as dawn brightens the horizon—It is a great book written in his strongest vein by one of the most daring of France's modern writers.

"It is said that every adult male in France under the age of fifty-five either experienced the change of spirit and outlook described so vividly within the rays of Light or was affected by the change in a way which in America no one can realize. For this reason there will be found in M. Barbusse's admirable novel a much needed interpretation of the spirit in which France is facing the reconstruction not only of land and material things, but of a whole new spiritual outlook on life."

pathy, if not his liking, does in some measure go out. More than any other character in the book—save one which plays a minor part—he resembles a real human being, a man envious and embittered, with a streak of cruelty in his nature and many very far from estimable qualities. But one believes in the reality of his suffering as one never does in those of Blanche, and believes also in the depth and honesty of his passion for Kitty. Perhaps, too, that natural human desire to champion the under-dog unconsciously causes one to take the part of the middle-aged, crippled, sensitive man whom life had treated so unkindly, against his youthful, handsome rival—particularly as that rival is a somewhat irritating person, whose flaccid behavior renders Kitty's disgust and exasperation perfectly comprehensible. Apart from Sydney, the best drawn character in the novel is that of Mrs. Stanfield, the mother of Blanche and Kitty, a downright person, quite outspoken in her dislike of a play in which the people "talk everlastingly, instead of coming to close quarters and giving us thrills," even when that play was written by her friend, Tristram Rolfe.

No small part of the book is given over to writers and writing, for Tristram Rolfe is a novelist and playwright, the author of many excellent volumes ignored by the general public, and of many preposterous plays which that same general public crowded to see and to applaud, while the "leading juvenile," Claude Hadow, is a budding poet and Sydney Maddison a critic of considerable repute. The main theme of the story, however, has to do with the heroine, Blanche. She had married Jack Maddison because her parents wished her to, and without caring for him in the least, and he proved to be such an excessively bad husband that all her friends joined with her family in urging her to divorce him. This she would not do, although she frankly detested him. Presently his splendid constitution gave way beneath the strain of prolonged debauchery, and after a while he died in such a way and under such circumstances as made it seem more than probable that his wife had killed him. Of course, she had done nothing of the kind, but, although the reader never has any doubt as to who was the real culprit, the ingenious complications which ensue add interest to what is on the whole a well-written book.

THE FORTUNE

THE FORTUNE. A Romance of Friendship. By Douglas Goldring. New York: Scott & Seltzer.

THE mixing of art and propaganda is a somewhat delicate operation, requiring a peculiar talent. Mr. Douglas Goldring has talent and a great deal of it, but not that particular kind. As an artist he has very considerable promise; as a propagandist he is somewhat too naïve to be convincing, particularly since he is devoting his efforts to the lost cause of socialistic pacifism in England during the war.

The "Romance of Friendship" deals with the influence of James Murdoch, an Anglo-Irishman, over Harold Firbank, the son of a stuffy middle-class English family—an influence begun in school and continuing long after. Harold knows that James is of a higher order—and in these chapters the reader knows it, too—so he has the grace to accept meekly James's constant criticism of his habits, his thoughts, and his ideals. James, indeed, does for Harold very much what his distinguished fellow-countryman, Mr. Shaw, did for early twentieth century England; and year after year James goes steadily on, dynamiting the stumps of prejudice and mental laziness and cheap satisfaction out of Harold's mind, until eventually he turns a boy who was on the road to complete mental solidification into an intelligent and thinking man.

The thing has been done, but to portray it in literature, and without making James appear as a particularly odious intellectual prig, is not at all easy. Mr. Goldring has done it admirably, aided by a restraint which departs from him in the latter part of the book, and in the process has given some amusing and discerning pictures of life at a public school, at Oxford, and in a Lancashire coast resort. But when the war comes on it has as lamentable an effect on the author as on his characters. James is a Socialist nonresistent; Harold and Harold's wife Petronella—usually abbreviated to Peter—take the view of the war which the majority of the world took and held to a victory that neither James nor the author appears to have anticipated. So the latter part of the book deals with the influence of James's ideas on Harold and Peter, with James of course the ultimate victor.

The war made James long-winded, and in

Did the Maid of France Return?—

He was weary and broken, this soldier of France. Could he ever fight again? Was France worth his effort? He flung his tired body down on the ferns in a little dell . . . he was done. And then he felt a Presence. A peasant girl stood there, a girl in a red dress, with her black hair down her back and eyes the color of topaz, and a radiance all about her . . . And the soldier went back. It is one of the beautiful stories of all time—

WHITE SHADOWS in the SOUTH SEAS

By FREDERICK O'BRIEN

WHAT WE SAY

THIS is a fascinating record of the author's residence among the beautiful, simple, friendly Caucasian cannibals of the Marquesas Islands in the far South Seas. There are in it true stories of action and adventure as dramatic and thrilling as anything in fiction. There are character-sketches of strangely alluring personalities that remain etched in your memory. There are descriptions of scenery positively thrilling in their beauty. There is a constant flow of humor throughout that makes you laugh—and then there are tremendous overtones that sometimes touch you to tears.

It is the most remarkable travel book we have published in many years. The critics all over the country have given it an extraordinary welcome.

KERMIT ROOSEVELT'S STORY OF MESOPOTAMIA IN THE WAR

WAR IN THE GARDEN OF EDEN. By Kermit Roosevelt. Illustrated from photographs by the author. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

READERS of Kermit Roosevelt's "War in the Garden of Eden" will enjoy a vivid record of the dramatic Mesopotamian campaign as well as many interesting pages of narrative comment on the peoples and places that made the "cradle of the world" so picturesque. But the outstanding feature of the book, with which they will be more impressed, is the author's unconscious revelation of the two dominant traits of his personality, his scholarship and his modesty.

As a Captain in the Motor Machine Gun Corps of the British Expeditionary Forces Kermit Roosevelt fought on the Tigris front, did dangerous reconnoisance work and took part in skirmishes along the Kurdish front and was in the advances on the Euphrates and the attack on the Persian lines. Later, after being transferred to the American Army as a Captain of field artillery, he was in the thick of the Argonne fighting. Yet nowhere in his book does he picture the danger he faced. When he refers to any engagement in which he took part it is in an off-hand, impersonal way that does not suggest that the author gathered his impressions under fire. For example: "Our artillery did some good work, but while we were waiting to attack we suffered rather heavily. We had to advance over a wide stretch of open country to reach the Turkish first lines. By nightfall the second line of trenches was practically all in our hands * * * Our casualties during the day had amounted to about two thousand." That's all there is to his description of the storming and capture of Tekrit. Surely no author who gave a somewhat more detailed account of that advance over open ground in the face of enemy fire could be accused of blowing his own horn.

Similar omission of personal experience characterizes his account of the part he played on the western front. "Soon after the termination of my period of instruction I was in command of C Battery of the 7th Field Artillery in the Argonne fighting." Not a line of description of the hell faced by the American troops of the 1st Division in that offensive follows anywhere in the book. Nothing is said of the danger faced, the sleep lost, and the food gone without by Captain Roosevelt. He does let drop the fact that a bath he had at Bouligny after the armistice was the first he had enjoyed for over a month. He mentions being in the shell-ridden town of Landres et St. George, but marks his presence there only because it was in that place that he met his elder brother, "Ted," and his brother-in-law, Colonel Richard Derby. In connection with the latter, he comments: "Once when Colonel Derby introduced me to General Lejeune, who was commanding his division, (the 2d,) the General, instead of making some remark about my father, said: 'I shall always be glad to meet a relative of a man with Colonel Derby's record.'"

At various points throughout the book we are surprised to learn that young Roosevelt is familiar with Portuguese, Swahili, Arabic, French, and Spanish. His repeated references to history and literature bear testimony to his broad scholarship as convincing as his matter-of-fact descriptions of the captures of Daur, Tekrit, Haditha, Ana, Kifri, and Kirkuk are to his bravery.

Not even in the stress of warfare did Kermit Roosevelt give over his voracious reading. During a halt in the march against Daur he pulls a copy of "Vingt Ans Après" out of his pocket. In the captured town he reads Xenophon's "Anabasis", and Plutarch's "Lives." Voltaire's "Charles XII." and Layard's "Early Adventures" occupy his free moments during exciting patrol duty around Babylon. Waiting for the attack on Haditha he reads Disraeli's "Tancrid"; in the lulls of the advances against Kifri and Kirkuk he resorts to Camoens's "Lusiad" and "David Harum" for entertainment. At a banquet in the desert town of Zobeir, when the speeches become too long-winded, he surreptitiously slips a handy volume out of his pocket. While marching into Germany after the armistice and to relieve the tedium of garrison duty there he turns to Gibbons' "Rise and Fall," Flaubert's "Education Sentimentale," Borrows's "Zincali", and the Oxford books of French and English verse.

"War in the Garden of Eden" is full of intimate glimpses of famous men like Generals Maude and Allenby, and sketches of picturesque characters like "Banjo" Paterson and Colonel Lawrence. It is crammed with anecdotes rich in human interest; the author tells how he acted as a volunteer stoker while passing through the Red Sea on his way out to Mesopotamia, of the Christmas feast he arranged for his men with money sent him by his father for the purpose, of Jacob Astor, milliner of Berncastel, of using the tomb of the Roman Emperor Julian as an observation post, of evenings spent in Arab coffee houses and bazaars and of his amusement in watching the officers of the Japanese destroyer which brought him back to Europe eating fried eggs with chop sticks.

The book is well illustrated with photographs taken by the author and with a map showing the region of Mesopotamia where the fighting took place. A drawing of the author, made by John S. Sargent, serves as a frontispiece. The dedication of the book reads, "To the memory of my father."

MARTY LENDS A HAND

MARTY LENDS A HAND. By Harold S. Latham. Illustrated by E. C. Caswell. New York: The Macmillan Company.

WITH his second story for young people Mr. Latham very definitely sets himself in the ranks—which are never crowded—of those who have a clear call to write for adolescents, whether boys or girls. Both this and his previous story, "Under Orders," published last Fall, have apparently been written with the needs and tastes in view of boys in their early and middle teens. But girls of similar ages will like them just as well, for the modern young woman-in-the-making is not what the girl of even twenty years ago was, and, just as her pleasures and her chief interests have suffered a change of base into the open, so has her reading until now a good boys' book will attract her more than will the kind of story that her mother at her age read with delight.

"Marty Lends a Hand" is a good story for young readers for the same reason that "Under Orders" was a good story for them, because it is what they are themselves when they are what they should be—simple, wholesome, natural and unconsciously democratic. It is a page out of typical, every-day American life which will appeal to all its prospective readers, because they will recognize it as true and will instinctively know, without thus defining it to themselves, that it is the kind of life that makes this country what it is, the kind of life that is America, throughout all the land. It is not specialized to any one phase of American development, but, with a little change in its background, would be just as true and just as typical in any State of the Union. Marty's whole-souled enjoyment of his work and his play, his manliness when it becomes necessary for him to shoulder responsibility, even his young fear that he will not be equal to it, his willingness to work hard and the loyal good-fellowship of his school mates, both boys and girls, are as truly and typically American as is the engaging picture of him which the illustrator has made for the frontispiece. The story is dated after our entrance into the war, and in the course of his experiment in the growing of mushrooms Marty has some exciting adventures with German propaganda and German spies. A good many other thrilling things happen during the course of the story, and Marty has his share in them all. But they are all things which might happen in any American town, in any set of young people, and Mr. Latham has made out of them a very good story indeed, a story as interesting that no young person will want to put the book down, once it is begun, until it is finished. It is even a better story than was "Under Orders," because the author has handled his materials with a firmer, surer touch and with a more skillful hand. It is a better constructed story, better rounded out, with its interest less diffused. As in its predecessor, its characters, while simply drawn, have vitality and life-likeness. They are human and have their little foibles, but they are all good company for any young American. "Under Orders" has won a notable success, but "Marty Lends a Hand" is likely to outstrip it in the admiration of the young readers for whom it is written.

Alaska

A clear and comprehensive view of Alaska is presented by William B. Stephenson, Jr., in "The Land of Tomorrow." It comes from an author who knows our great Northern Territory exceptionally well, his engagements, first as manager of the Pacific Cold Storage Plant on the Island of St. Michael, and then as United States Commissioner, having put him in the way of acquiring a full knowledge of the entire Alaskan country. Mr. Stephenson portrays Alaska as a land of opportunity for the man without capital, as well as for the man of wealth; he especially invites attention to it by men who have come out of the army, and are now considering what they shall do next. (George H. Doran Company.)

SOMETHING DOING
By VARICK VANARDY
Author of "The Lady of the Night Wind."

Varick Vanardy has written a new thriller, and developed a most unusual plot which centers around the doings of Morgan-Crewe, "The Fast-Speed Man," whose intimate connection with the secret service, strange adventures among crooks and criminals, and how a beautiful woman became involved in the plot, makes this a powerful, gripping story.

into a comedy rather than building her fun on a sound plot, and some of the others sprawl rather too much.

There will be reminiscent grins when New Yorkers read about the decorations which were put up for the first home-coming soldiers:

It looked like the powdered-sugar industry was going to suffer because about all the plaster in the country seemed to be being used on arches which looked like dago-wedding cakes and you actually missed the dolls dressed like brides and grooms off the top of them. And here and there was some funny looking columns of the same white stuff, and on the Public Library steps a bunch of spears and shields was thrown all over the place just as if a big Shakespearian production had suddenly give it up in despair and left their props and hoofed it back to Broadway. It certainly was imposing.

It is a book of grins, in fact, rather than one of chuckles or out-and-out laughs. The present reviewer found it amusing without being irresistible, but—pshaw! when did two people ever agree about a joke?

ROSALIE BYRNES

THE SHADOW OF ROSALIE BYRNES. By Grace Sartwell Mason. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co.

A BOOK of the type which is perhaps best described as a plot novel, "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," depends entirely upon its story. There is no attempt at characterization, style, or anything save the telling of a series of events. For its right to claim a reader's attention, such a book relies entirely upon the skill, plausibility and ingenuity with which its plot is constructed and unfolded—and "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" shows small trace of any one of these desirable qualities. The story, instead of developing smoothly and logically, breaks sharply in the middle. Up to a certain point, what interest it has is centred upon the endeavors of Gerald Cromwell's relatives to break his marriage with Rosalie Byrnes—their idea apparently being that a divorce can be bought like a paper of needles. These relatives are the kind of persons who do not welcome to their hearts and homes young women who have figured prominently in newspaper scandals, which they believe to be the case with the girl who is known both as Rosalie Byrnes and as Leona Maddern. Then suddenly Rosalie's endeavors to shield her objectionable sister from the unpleasant consequences of a somewhat too vigorous action become the centre of importance. But, of course, the distressed husband and entirely virtuous wife are presently reunited, and the wicked and worldly relatives confounded.

The tale opens at a camp to which Rosalie Byrnes, a professional singer, comes to entertain the men. There she meets Gerald Cromwell; they fall in love on the instant, and after a five days' courtship are married on the eve of his departure for France. He knows nothing about her, and she only a little about him. His hard-hearted sister and her fiancé recognize in Rosalie's photograph the face of a chorus girl who had been mixed up in a scandal, and then the trouble begins.

CONSEQUENCES

CONSEQUENCES. By E. M. Delafield. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

MISS DELAFIELD'S three previous novels, "Zella Sees Herself," "The War Workers," and "The Pelicans," have made her well known among lovers of English fiction and seekers after the unusual in this country. As the daughter of Lady Clifford, whose novels, published before her second marriage while she was writing as Mrs. Henry De La Pasture, have been widely read in both England and the United States, an immediate interest in her books would have awaited her. But with characteristic English independence she chose to forego all this possible prestige and to win whatever interest and acclaim might be her fortune solely upon her own merits. Accordingly she disguised her name sufficiently to conceal her family connection, and as E. M. Delafield has made her appeal to the reading public. Since her first novel was published, two years ago, her pen has been busy, and critics have noted in each new book an increasing surety of touch and widening of outlook.

This new story goes back for its scene to the England of the middle and late nineties and comes to its tragic end ten years later. The central character, for whose depiction and for the working out of whose destiny the novel seems to have been written, is the eldest daughter of a wealthy and aristocratic family, Alex Clare, who had the misfortune of being a neurotic young girl before science and society had discovered how profoundly interesting and important neurotics are. She has boundless possibilities of emotional life and an ardent desire to worship somebody, almost anybody who will permit her devotion, without the abil-

THE STRATEGY OF THE GREAT WAR
By William L. McPherson

Here is the complete story of the world war from the strategical standpoint. A volume of absorbing interest to students of military tactics—and to all, in fact, who want to know just how the war was won.
The author, who attracted nation-wide attention by his "Military Comment" in "The New York Tribune" during the last year of the war, takes the view that Germany lost the war through certain specific errors in military policy.
He analyzes the various movements and campaigns of both the Allies and the Germans so that the layman can easily visualize them. It is a work that is an extremely valuable contribution to the literature of the war.

LITERARY TREASURE HOUSE FOR YOUNG READERS

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE. The Children's Encyclopedia. Editors in Chief, Arthur Mee and Holland Thompson. Introduction by John H. Finley. Illustrated. New and revised edition. Twenty volumes. New York: The Grolier Society.

THIS long-time famous treasure house for the children, which adults have been known to buy for them much as they take them to the circus, with as much reference to their own enjoyment as to that of the youngsters, is now ready for the oncoming season of gifts in an entirely new edition. The text has been revised wherever necessary to bring it abreast of the developments of the world so that the evolutions in industrial methods, in scientific theories and facts, in history, and, in fact, in all the phases of human life and knowledge are incorporated in the various departments. The text of the whole twenty volumes has been reset with new type and throughout new illustrations have been made.

The new edition retains the structure of the old, its varied and comprehensive material being arranged in sixteen departments, each having its own editor responsible for the matter of his own section and the manner of its presentation. Each one of these departments fills a section of its own in each volume, so that the young reader will find a wondrously varied bill of intellectual fare in whatever volume he chances to open. Undoubtedly this feature has been an important factor in the continued and growing popularity of "The Book of Knowledge," for young minds are not the only ones prone to revolt at the sight of a huge number of pages dealing with the same subject. By the methods employed here such subjects as the description and history of the several countries of the world, natural history, plant life, biography, famous books, stories and legends, the interesting secrets of familiar things, and all the other comprehensive features of the work, are treated each in a separate part of each volume. The changes that the great war wrought in the world have received consideration in all the departments affected by it. There are many articles concerned in one way or another with the facts and the developments of present-day life that inspire in boys and girls the desire to become good and loyal citizens, while their scout and campfire organizations receive the treatment, with many interesting illustrations, to which the important place they hold in the life of the nation entitles them. All the articles, whether dealing with history, biography, the achievements of science, the wonders of nature, geography, art, the pleasures of literature, are written in such a simple, direct, and interesting style that they are bound to appeal to young readers, to whom overmuch detail and dry presentation are never welcome.

One of the interesting features of the work is the treasure-store of good literature that it contains. This alone should make "The Book of Knowledge" something to be hailed with gratitude by all parents who find it difficult to preserve their children's minds from contact with the oceans of trashy books and magazines that flood modern life with their enervating and deteriorating influence upon all minds, and especially upon young ones whose standards have not yet been formed. For here are to be found extracts from or condensations of or entire presentations of many of the standard works that are a part of the everlasting riches of the English language, the works that are an unfailing delight to both young and old and acquaintance with which always helps to set the standard of literary appreciation high and secure. The large and comprehensive collection of poetry, representative of its development through all the history of English literature, is especially to be commended. It would be difficult to find anywhere a better one for the use of young people.

"The Book of Knowledge" is not intended to serve as a textbook—although one of its departments is devoted to a picturesque variety and an alluring presentation of "School Lessons"—nor does it aim to be a sort of cramming machine to stuff knowledge into the minds of protesting children. Its purpose is to set before the young a table spread with all manner of intellectual viands wherefrom the child may eat as it will and find nothing that will injure in any way, where it can be sure of finding the answer to the innumerable curiosities which sight and hearing and touch and taste awaken in its mind as the senses develop and the brain begins to ask its everlasting "why?"; where curiosity about hundreds of things will be not only satisfied but by that very satisfaction aroused to wider and more adventurous seeking. Whatever the type of the child's mind, it can discover for itself in all this huge store the mental nourishment that it most needs. In his interesting introduction Dr. Finley, suggesting the part the work should play in the life of the young, says that it must not be expected to take the place "of a hard disciplining of the mind," the sort of mental toil that is necessary for the achievement of great things, or of any kind of thing of real consequence, and then calls attention to its value for the nourishing and protecting of the eager mind of the normal child. Doubtless it is along these two lines of nourishment and protection that the greatest value of the "The Book of Knowledge" lies. For scientists have been calling attention of late to the importance of beginning to fill the mind from its earliest years with great stores of information which sink back into its subconscious regions and form a rich intellectual soil whose fertility is evident in the greater mental vigor of mature years. It has even been conjectured that such rich feeding of the mind in childhood may be one of the factors in the production of genius, just as the queen bee is developed from the ordinary stock by the food upon which the larva is fed.

Every now and then one finds throughout the book—and to the adult mind possessing insight and discrimination the discovery gives the keenest satisfaction—some truth applied to life so simply and directly that it ought to influence young minds toward sane and wholesome conceptions of life, its comparative values and the world's struggles in the development of civilization. For instance, in a paragraph answering the question of whether a fly in comparison with a man is the stronger of the two there is brought out the everlasting truth of the superiority of brain to muscle and of skill to strength. "Man is master," the children are told, "because of what really matters, which is mind. The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, but to the wise, who will use their brains." The growing generation needs to have that truth hammered into the heads with all possible force. If it had been more widely realized in recent years civilization would not now be shaken to its foundations by the determined attempt of theorists to penalize brains and training for the benefit of muscles, and school teachers and college professors would not now be compelled to live upon salaries less than the wages of unskilled day laborers.

Many new illustrations have been made for this new edition of "The Book of Knowledge" and all its articles are copiously illustrated. Many of the pictures are full page plates in color, some are reproductions of famous paintings and old prints, while others show scenes in all the lands of the earth, illustrations of industrial methods and achievements, specimens of plants and animals. In all there are almost ten thousand pictures.

The fact that the index, which fills half the last volume, contains twenty-five thousand entries is an indication of the scope of the work's contents. Its editors are justified in their contention that, while "the book does not contain all the accumulated knowledge of the ages, it does contain those things which it is most important to know."

HER ELEPHANT MAN.

HER ELEPHANT MAN. By Pearl Doles Bell. Illustrated. Robert M. McBride & Co.

A pleasant but entirely conventional and rather trite little story is Pearl Doles Bell's new tale of "Her Elephant Man." It is a story of Barnum and Williams's Circus, the "Greatest Show on Earth," and all the characters are members of the company gathered beneath the "Big Top." The beautiful heroine, Joan Kennerly, aged 17, is the star rider and most important performer in the entire show. Every one adores her, except the woman who is jealous of her and tries to injure her; but her own affections are centred principally on two men. One of these is the old man she calls "Uncle Jerimy," who has cared for her and spoiled her ever since she was a baby, and the other is "Her Elephant Man," known to the circus people as Philip Dorset. His real name, however, is not Dorset but Warner, and he is "a millionaire, horseman, hunter of big game, and scion of a fine old New York family," who has gone into hiding for, of course, the noblest of reasons. There is, too, a mystery about Joan's birth, which is eventually cleared up in the most satisfactory way for all concerned.

The most entertaining thing about the book is the glimpse it gives of the lives of the circus people. The author apparently knows something about existence under the "Big Top," and it seems a pity that she lacks the ability to make really good use of her knowledge. However, the descriptions of the daily routine, of the storm and of the nervous tension of the performers while the wind tears at the canvas, are not without interest.

COLAS BREUGNON, BURGUNDIAN

One critic's praise is combined with a very adequate description,—

"This virile and jovial fellow. What he tells us is precisely the thing in which we of today are interested. . . . In those days a man's contact with the world he lived in was saner, more direct, more satisfying than now. Physic had not yet taken the place of physique, a strong arm might still prod a tardy justice, and many a good thing fell to the lot of him whose heart was stout and whose imagination was fertile. Breugnon feasts for the sheer joy of eating and drinking; he fights lustily for the satisfaction of his instinctive desire to punish those who have injured him. . . . To live in the company of Breugnon is a tonic." —THE BOOKMAN his discourses there is nothing but the commonplace of pacifist propaganda. Which is the more unfortunate because the author had placed a rather attractive problem—the conflict between James and Peter for Harold's soul, and the capacity of Harold, now that James had remade his intellect, for really independent thought. In other words, had Harold really learned to think, or had he merely learned to parrot James instead of parroting his parents and the rector? The author might have made nonpacifists believe in the eventual prostration of all his characters before the majestic intellect of James if he had not given us some samples of James's arguments. Nor, in spite of the repeated assurances of James's sincere love for humanity, is it possible to credit him with entire sincerity in his reaction to the challenges of those who favor the war. When, for example, he says that "King Albert is simply a sentimental aristocrat, intoxicated by the notion of le beau geste; we gush all over him now—history may vomit on his memory"—it is impossible to repress the suspicion that James is merely being Shavian.

To pacifists all this is heresy, no doubt; but even pacifists might acknowledge that Mr. Goldring's propaganda method is a little inept. The pacifist case is defended by two characters, one of whom has been presented as the most intelligent in the book, while the other is defined as the most saintly. Against these twin chips of perfection are marshaled an array of supporters of the war who without exception—barring the eventually converted Harold and Peter—are unthinkable asses. Mr. Goldring's "patriots" have no better argument to offer against James's mouthing of the usual claptrap about international capitalists and the venal press than vague generalities on national honor. As for the Germans, who most of us supposed had something to do with it, they do not appear except as the objects of some outbursts of praise from the perfect James.

However, the author shows an ability unusual in so zealous a person to recognize the good points of even a type he hates so thoroughly as that of the British officer, and his treatment of the Dublin rising of 1916 is unusually fair and sensible. And, as an artist, he undeniably has a future. The characterization is for the most part excellent—notably in the case of Peter, as well as in almost all the minor characters. Even James was convincing so long as his brilliant reasoning was left for the most part to the reader's imagination. And the author has a gift for epigram, and a somewhat unusual degree of the interpretative pictorial sense.

BELIEVE YOU ME

BELIEVE YOU ME. By Nina Wilcox Putnam. New York: George H. Doran Company.

THE American dialect story still rages. But today it is not Yankee, nor hoosier, nor cracker, nor Rocky Mountain English that holds the centre of the stage; it is chewing-gum American. It has male and female variants, though it is easily recognizable in either style, and its distribution is occupational rather than geographic, while strongly suggesting the metropolis. It is both a spoken and a written dialect, and in fact reaches some of its most impressive manifestations in epistolary specimens. Whether it derives more largely from the Yiddish than the English is a matter for debate, although it is used in its pure form by those who are unmistakably American.

In other words, there are now, as there always have been, humorists who bolster up the comic situation and the humorous characterization with Charlie Chaplin assaults on the King's English. Josh Billings and Artemus Ward did it in their own fashion; Nina Wilcox Putnam and Ring Lardner find a reasonably fresh source of fun in the fantastic inversions and obfuscated sentence structure of Broadway dressing rooms and Chicago ball parks.

"Believe You Me" presents in six reels the adventures of the female half of "the biggest parlor-dancing outfit in America," while the cruel war interferes with its refined and lucrative operations. Marie La Tour "got a swell idea." She could enlist! And enlist she did, in a variety of ways which kept her from getting bored on twenty-two hundred a week while her Jim was overseas.

Mrs. Putnam deals in homely stuff and slapstick situations with equal zest: Ma's appetite, and the ennobling effects of cold cream, and the irresponsibilities of the woman in business for her country, might have been handed down from that forgotten humorist of the last generation—or was it the one before the last?—Aunt Samantha. But the pro-German alligator and the anarchist parrot are sufficiently up to date. The first of the six stories is the neatest; Mrs. Putnam puts a story

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS FOR CHILDREN'S BOOK WEEK

THERE is every indication that the Children's Book Week, commencing tomorrow, will bring within the reach of those who are interested in juvenile literature an unusual number and variety of important books intended for young readers. The full details of this national campaign of the American Booksellers' Association, known as the Children's Book Week, were given in a special article appearing in the Autumn Number of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW Oct. 19. Herewith follow descriptions of some of the important books for children published this season and of interest in this campaign.

Nothing that will come out in the way of books for children will be any more worth while than "The Burgess Bird Book for Children," by Thorton W. Burgess, (Little, Brown & Co.) Mr. Burgess has a marvelous list of nature story books for children to his credit, but this is the most ambitious of them all. Bird lovers will say that it is quite the best of anything that he has done and should not every one be a bird lover? It adds greatly to the zest of living to know the pretty creatures by sight and song, to recognize them in expected and unexpected places and the book, which the author calls a "labor of love—love for little children and love for the birds," will undoubtedly receive the warmest kind of a welcome.

It supplies a definite need, the writer says in a short foreword; it was prepared at the urgent request of booksellers and others who have felt that there was lacking a satisfactory medium through which to interest children in bird life. The book is a volume of 354 pages, told in Mr. Burgess's usual story form, with Peter Rabbit doing most of the talking. There is a page index to the birds at the back and a list of the fifty-seven wonderful colored illustrations of Louis Agassiz Fuertes. Mr. Burgess expressed his indebtedness to Mr. Fuertes in his endeavor to make the book a real assistance to the beginner in the study of native birds. "They are so accurate and true to life," he says, "that study of them will enable any one to identify the species shown. Mr. Fuertes's work is very beautiful, and excellently reproduced. There are the names of the birds with a line of descriptive text under each, and the book altogether will be a delight to any one, big or little, who wishes to know the birds. The meadow lark, in full color, carolling from the top of a rough-hewn, vine encircled post, is used both on the cover of the book and on the jacket.

"The Boys' Airplane Book," by A. Frederick Collins, member of the Royal Aero Club of the United Kingdom, (F. A. Stokes Company,) is a practical volume for any one who is interested in the science of the airplane. The airplane is the greatest invention of all ages, Mr. Collins says in his foreword, and wonders what Columbus would think of this marvelous way of crossing the ocean in a sixth as many hours as it took him days. Seven million years passed between the time the first flying creature flew and the day when the first man-carrying, heavier than air machine was sailed under its own power. The greatest flying creature was a reptile with wings, the pteranodon, a giant lizard with bat-like wings which measured 20 feet from tip to tip. The book, with illustrations, drawings and working diagrams, gives a full history of the development of flying machines and everything pertaining to them, the instruments used on them, records of some airplane flights and the various uses which can be made of them.

"Reid in the Everglades," by the Rev. Henry S. Spalding, (Benziger Brothers,) is an interesting story of a slacker losing himself in Florida, a small boy from an orphan asylum and Big Tom Reed, a Brooklyn traffic policeman, who with his family goes to Florida to start a Catholic colony. Phil, the boy, who runs off with the slacker, has interesting experiences in camping, there are Indians and aviators, and the slacker becomes an aviator and makes good finally.

A large, serious, historical book of 248 pages is "Daring Deeds of Great Pathfinders," by Edgar Sanderson, (Seely, Service & Co. Illustrated.) It is an English book, and the author is a Cambridge man. It is rewritten from a larger and more expensive book by the writer, "Heroes of Pioneering." It begins with the settlement of Virginia and Captain John Smith, tells of the French in Canada, the founding of New England; there are chapters devoted to British possessions, and it closes with the "French in Algeria."

Historical, written in story form, is "Tom Strong, Lincoln's Scout," by Alfred Bishop Mason. (Henry Holt & Co.) Tom Strong is the fourth good patriot of that name in his family. Going to Washington with his father, who is sent to Russia, President Lincoln takes a liking to Tom, and, in face of all opposition, to his taking "an infant" into military service. Tom is made his scout and makes good. He has many thrilling experiences and sees some of what Sherman called "beautiful fighting" with that General. The book begins with the death of John Brown and ends with that of Lincoln. There are many illustrations of a historical nature. The book was dedicated, by permission, to "Theodore Roosevelt, Inspirer of Patriotism, a Great American."

A fine story of adventure is "Lost with Lieutenant Pike," by Edwin L. Sabin, (Lippincott.) It tells in attractive manner the adventures of young Lieutenant Pike, who travels as a Government explorer through the West in the early days of the nineteenth century. The party endured with great bravery trials and hardships. They had many experiences with the Indians and discovered Pike's Peak, afterward named for the young Lieutenant, who brought back a vast quantity of important information for the Government. As Brigadier General Pike died, when only 34, at the battle of York in the war of 1812.

Two very nice books for the little people are brought out by the Houghton Mifflin Company—"A Little Freckled Person," by Mary Carolyn Davies, and "Wee Ann," by Rhoda C. Phillips. The first book is one of verses, some very short, some longer and all most human and full of understanding of little children through, perhaps, the little girl who is used as the frontispiece for the book—"a little freckled person who has never much to say." Might not any little girl tell her troubles as they are told in "The Sorrows of a Seamstress":

I'm learning to sew; I'm basting
And hemming, and all that,
But I wish that the eye were bigger
Or the thread not quite so fat.

It might be any little boy or girl who is having a perfectly beautiful time crying in the two-line rhyme "Grief":

Forget it soon? It's cause I know
That I'll forget, I'm crying so:

And here are two lines from the quite long "Need":

There's room in all our lives, I think,
For one small kitten, black as ink.

There are four lines to "The Rabbit":

A rabbit works its ears, and tries
To watch you with its rabbit eyes;
Its saucy little tail it flounces
And when it hits the ground it bounces.

It is not all for girls—the nice little verses are as much for the little freckled boy, and the little boy and girl without freckles will like them, too. The pictures are by Harold Cue.

The story of Wee Ann tells about what the little girl did when she went to visit her grandmother and what happened at her own home while she was gone. Any one would know that Wee Ann was an unusually nice little girl from the name. And there are so many interesting things at grandmother's! There is the horse and the cow, two little black kittens, a nice little red chicken that Wee Ann adopts because it is about the color of her own hair and names Cora Mary because that is such a beautiful name, and there is Toby, a little white dog with one black ear who came to live at grandmother's and be Wee Ann's very own. Then so many things happen. Uncle Jamie builds a playhouse in the tree, grandmother makes Wee Ann a beautiful pair of red stockings like those she is making for the soldiers, and there is a great disappointment. Wee Ann had a penny to spend at the store for anything she wanted, but the candy man made a terrible mistake, and in the bag, in place of the candy, Wee Ann found—a white clay pipe. However, it turned out to be much nicer than anything the little girl had ever had, for with soapsuds and a little glycerine in the water she made the most beautiful soap bubbles. The big surprise at the end of the book was a baby brother named Jock. He was a very strange baby, Wee Ann thought, as she touched his tiny hand and he opened his tiny mouth for a baby yawn.

"No teeth," said Wee Ann, "and no hair, but I like him."

Clifton Johnson has a continually growing series of children's classics, (Macaulay,) "Bedtime Wonder Tales," from folklore stories of many lands. They are volumes of comfortable size, 128 pages each, cloth covered boards, with very good pictures in soft colors by Harry L. Smith. The inside cover pages show pictures that are fairy tales in themselves, and each book is in a gay picture jacket. Here is a list of five of the books: "The Fox and the Little Red Hen," "The Babes in the Woods," "Hop-o'-

The Moon Pool
by A. Merritt.

Here is a fantastic romance of today that sets the reader to wondering through the awesome possibilities it suggests. It is a story of swarming millions—supermen and women who inhabit an age-old world, set down deep in the bowels of the earth.

An experienced librarian says: "Mr. Merritt's 'Moon Pool' is the last and best word in imaginative romance . . . He has almost snatched from H. G. Wells the laurel wreath of scientific mystery-weaving."

The Nation's Greatest Asset

The children of today are the citizens of tomorrow. They are the nation's greatest asset. No labor so important, no duty so imperative, as that of making the children into 100% American citizens. We do not want bookworms, we want intelligent, well-informed, forceful men and women, who can do their own thinking. Only a small part of this education can be obtained in the schoolroom. Three-fourths of it must be acquired in the daily reading, entertainments and occupations in the home.

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is a new method of education in the home. Over 10,000 delightful educational pictures and brief intensely interesting articles tell the children everything they need to know in plain and simple language. It is the first work of reference which a child ever really enjoyed reading. It expands every faculty of the child's growing mind and takes care of the outdoor as well as the indoor life of the home.

Curiosity—the Great Teacher

CURIOSITY is the beginning of all knowledge. Do you know any subject about which your child has not asked you a dozen questions? Let him ask as many as he likes, and be sure to answer them correctly. That is the parent's most important and most easily neglected duty. If you discourage your child's curiosity you will injure his mind, and the bright boy or girl becomes stupid or indifferent. Through curiosity Columbus discovered America. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is the simplest and most natural method of helping the child to educate himself. IT ANSWERS EVERY QUESTION A CHILD CAN ASK IN PLAIN AND SIMPLE LANGUAGE. So captivating is this great original work to the mind of a child that he absorbs with little effort the profound truths and great facts of the world of knowledge while reading its delightful pages and looking at the thousands of striking educational pictures.

Your Child Is Unique

Your child is like no other child in the world. He has his own peculiar taste and need for both physical and mental food. Some kinds of food agree with him and some do not. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is the right kind of nourishing food for the child's mind during the growing years. Give your child this remarkable, original work, and watch carefully which of the 16 Great Departments interests him most. Nature, Science, History, Biography, Astronomy, Physiology, Art, Literature, Poetry, or Manual Training. It will prove THE KEY to his natural bent, and the kind of work or profession in which he will most easily succeed.

Your Child's Chance

In round numbers, what is your child's chance to become successful? If uneducated, he has one chance out of 150,000; with a common school education, 4 chances; with a high school education, 87 chances; with a college education, 800 chances; WITH THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE in the home, every chance. It is not a luxury, it is an absolute necessity. It is an INVESTMENT in your child's future which will pay dividends as long as he lives. In over 650,000 homes today the children are being educated with THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE. Give your child his chance to compete with them.
